Three to four hundred tons of fishmeal loaded at Butedale will also be in the cargo of the southbound freighter.

Education Week

Prince Rupert Citizens Answer a Question
Interviewer—VESTA A. DOUGLAS, Conrad Street School

Can Education Help Combat Delinquency?

Mrs. Hill, Jr.—Child delinquency as we commonly understand it usually stems from lack of care and supervision with a consequent degree of freedom and idle time.

Formal education can and does help to combat delinquency insofar as a large portion of the child's time is accounted for and insofar as we may obtain teachers who are wise and understanding enough to make a personal effort on behalf of the child who is not well adjusted. The influence of such teachers, not only on the child, but on the home through the child, must not be underestimated.

The rebel youngster is helped through the fact of his being one of a social group such as the class at school, through being given responsibilities and training in co-operation and through the emphasis and development of his own outstanding ability or abilities.

The degree of success with which education can combat delinquency depends on the plan behind the educational system and upon the teachers. Education that takes cognizance only of man's material needs will not necessarily succeed. Our hope lies in an educational system in which spiritual and moral soundness are not only the foundation upon which it rests but are in fact its very roots and branches.

W. O. Smith—Education can help to combat delinquency by leading the mind to see the fascination and beauty of literature, the value of arithmetic and algebra, the need for grammar and languages and the broadening effect of all subjects. Great men of all ages have ever been sincerely anxious to help themselves and others by studiously endeavoring to further knowledge and education.

But education to combat delinquency can not be obtained in school alone. It must be supplemented by helpful parents aiding a diligent and enquiring attitude on the part of the pupil. Once this attitude is attained the pupil can learn from the world's great thinkers lessons which will build balanced outlook on life. This outlook can never foster delinquency.

Lydia Thom—School discipline automatically instills in a child the habit of conforming with set rules and regulations which are necessary to preserve our society. The chief factor in combatting delinquency is still parental influence.

Jean Cameron—Education should help combat delinquency as it teaches children to discern between right and wrong—but the home and church life also play a large part.

W. L. Woods—It is a well established fact that an educated child has a greater chance to succeed than an uneducated one. Education constitutes learning and, while one is busy learning, delinquency is not usually a problem. I believe the greatest cause of delinquency is lack of discipline in the home. Liquor in the home is often stated to be one of the major causes of delinquency. Large liquor sales in Prince Rupert are largely from transient and tourist trade. For every gallon sold approximately $18 is paid to the federal government in the form of excise tax, a portion of which is returned to the city. If these monies were used for the benefit of the children, I feel it would be a great asset and help alleviate local delinquency if such exists.

Russ Cameron—Decidedly. An idle child is often mischievous whereas one occupied is never free to get into mischief.

Roy Collinson—Education does combat delinquency during school sessions but the hours following must be attended to. A skating or roller rink with a limited fee and under able supervision would be advisable.

Mrs. D. A. Johnston—A busy, trained mind is better than an idle one. Therefore, give tangents of education and you will combat delinquency. The first key to combatting delinquency is strict intelligent discipline in the home.

Nephews of Mrs. Glassey in Guard

Fred Baxter and Earl Lund, among a party of Boy Scouts from Prince George who went to Victoria to form a guard of honor for the Lieutenant-Governor at the recent opening of the Legislature, are nephews of Mrs. H. P. Glassey of Prince Rupert.

Baxter is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baxter, his mother having been the former Violet Taylor who years ago was in the Canadian National superintendent's office here.

Scouting and other boys' activities have been traditional in the families of these two boys. Dixon Taylor, their uncle, went to Victoria Boys' Parliament 25 years ago to represent Cariboo. Formerly of Prince George, Dixon Taylor is now manager of a large sawmill at Crescent City, California.

Life Stories at Gyro Club

Three new Gyro Club members gave autobiographical talks at the club's weekly luncheon yesterday. They were London-born Edward Boulter, manager of the Canadian Bank of Ben Parkin, manager of Kelly-Douglas, who first saw light of day in Cranbrook, and James Field, owner of Armour Salvage Co., who hails from Regina and saw considerable service in the Royal Canadian Navy during the war.

President E. D. Forward was in the chair at yesterday's luncheon. Jack Deenan of Vancouver was a guest.
