The Korean Situation

ENERAL MacARTHUR'S Easter Saturday re-I marks as he boarded his airplane at Tokyo to visit the front aroused rather more excitement than they need have done. For, surely, we should by now have become used, if not reconciled, to the general's fondness for discussing publicly what the State Department acidly describes as "political issues which are beyond his responsibility as field commander." It is an embarrassing habit-most of all, one surmises, to the U.S. government. But the general's utterances and the general's views are his own personal ones. They are not, as it were, ex-cathedra statements by the commander of the United Nations forces. They do not reflect or represent the views of either the U.S. government or the other governments taking part in the Korean operations or the United Nations Assembly.

What are those views at present? There is no reason to suppose that they have changed materially. It is known that for some little time the idea has been under consideration of issuing a new statement of policy-either by the Assembly or by the governments engaged in Korea. But there is no reason to suppose that this would be more than a restatement of the things already said: for nothing has happened to bring about any particular change.

The objectives remain the same. To put an end to the double aggression—the North Korean and the Chinese. To restore peace to devastated Korea. To assist in its rehabilitation. To ensure its independence and, if possible, its unity. To prevent the extension of war and the miseries of war to other areas. And to open the way for a general peaceful settlement of the Far Eastern problems.

That is the program. Whether it can be rapidly achieved must depend largely upon the attitude of the Peking government. Do Mao Tse-Tung and his colleagues wish to put an end to the fighting and seek for a peaceful settlement? Or do they still believe—as they certainly believed at the beginning of the year—that they can achieve a decisive victory and win what Kim Ir-Sen, the North Korean leader, has called a "battle of annihilation"?

There is a complete absence of direct evidence. It is now two months since the United Nations Assembly set up its "good offices committee." During this time, Mr. Entezam, its chairman, has twice inquired, through the Swedish ambassador in Peking, whether the Chinese government would be willing to discuss the possibilities of ending the hostilities, either with the committee or with him in his capacity as president of the Assembly. No answer of any kind has been given. No indication has come through any other channel. And the Chinese press and radio are in these days exceptionally reticent on the whole subject. That may means that the Chinese Communist leaders are reconsidering the whole Korean situation: that they are thinking hard. Certainly they should be. For the military position has changed since they were so confidently expecting to "annihilate" the United Nations forces or compel them to a "Dunkirk" evacuation.

Two major Chinese offensives have been halted and broken. A third is now expected but it seems slow in developing.

This by no means suggests that the fighting strength of these armies has been broken. Far from it. But it does mean that the confidence of the Chinese leaders in the "invincibility" of their troops must have been somewhat shaken. Evan Stalin can hardly feel so completely confident today of the certainty of a decisive Chinese victory as he was when he gave his famous interview to Pravda.

BOMBAY, India -My lucky star surely seems to be working on this trip. For among the things I had down as "must" was to attend a big meeting addressed by the Prinme Minister. But my loop around the southern part of this vast land was arranged without knowledge of Mr. Nehru's Bombay visit.

I was one of a vost mass of about 150,000 people who went to Chawpatty beach on Sunday afternoon. This beach, by the way, is a famous spot where the great teacher, Gandhi, used to hold forth. I wondered how I would get in for there had been no time to arrange pass cards. In fact I had deliberately not informed the Indian Information people of my arrival. For I am doing two talks for the All-India Radio and the trouble is to get time to prepare them.

Coalition Will Last Another Two Years-Hospital Hike May Be Forgotten Then

VICTORIA.—The Coalition government will ride out the storm until another general election, two years from now. But it will be tough going. The storm is not yet showing any signs of going down. Indeed, they are many signs it will increase.

It is only fair, however, to say at this point that there is a lot of unreasonableness about government rushed it in as an election dodge, something like governments of old started railways and highways just before a test at the polls.

But just the same there's no denying that hospital coverage for a ramily for $42 a year is dirt cheap these days-when a hospital bill could make $1000 look mighty sick in a very short time. Everybody knows men and women who, in the past, were financially crippled by hospital bills-in a day, too, when hospital rates were not nearly as nigh as they are today.
