THE TURMOIL AT OTTAWA

J. K. Munro Writes Interestingly of Canadian Politics in Mc-Lean's Magazine.

Under the heading of "The Turmoil at Ottawa," J. K. Munro writes most interestingly in Mc-Lean's Magazine of political affairs as he sees them. He may be right or wrong but he is always interesting. He says:
"Canadian politics are in the melting pot. New parties are being born, old ones are remodeling their creeds to meet new and changed conditions. It is moving day all round and the common or peanut variety of politician is holding his breath till he discovers whether the coming order of things has a place for him and, if so, at how much.

"Yes it is a much muddled mess that meets your eye no matter which way you look. Let it rest for a moment on the Union Government and what do you find? Of course Sir Robert Borden is still there and still working industriously at his old job of doing nothing. Time was, not so many months ago either, when there were hopes that Sir Robert might follow his favorite occupation in another if not higher sphere. You'll remember when Sir Thomas White was cultivating popularity with the common herd of statesmen, when with a handshake like unto that of the Prince of Wales he was worming his way into the heart of Parliament, and the while the members went to bed softly humming 'His Bright Smile Haunts Me Still'?

Well in those sunny spring days Sir Robert really could see his household furniture being moved from the Washington of the North to that other city that spends much time trying to make amends for the lies the man it was named after could not tell. Yes, Sir Robert dreamed he was going to be British Ambassador to Washington. And others believed that dream. Even as astute a statesman as Lord Beaverbrook whispered to friends that Sir Robert was on his way and that another would soon hold the reins at Ottawa. But alas and likewise alack, something slipped. Whether it was that training as a constitutional lawyer does not fit a man for a diplomatic career, or that too many Englishmen whose incomes had been eaten up by war taxes had to be supplied with jobs; or that somebody in England had dined with Sir Robert and discovered that solemnity and stolidity, even when surmounted with the nicest hair in all the political world, does not everywhere pass for international intelligence, matters not. It is enough to know that Sir Robert did not go to Washington, that he did come back to us and that there is no immediate prospect of a change."

Mr. Munro touches up all the politicians who have appeared to the fore of late and concludes in part as follows:
"But not content with letting the future look after itself political seers are also trying to figure what the next Parliament will look like. So we may as well stand off to one side and take a look at that too, providing Sir Robert Borden still lives and his Unionist baby is able to sit up and take a little nap when the nest comes. You'll admit that he won't make any inroads in Quebec You will also hazard a prediction that the Maritimes won't lean any stronger towards Unionism. Consequently Hon. Mackenzie King should come up to the Ottawa River with 75 to 80 seats. But west of that he'll dwindle away to dribs and drabs and will probably appear at the barrier with about ninety odd followers all told. And at that he'll probably have the largest and most compact following in the New House.
Hon. J. A. Crerar and his farmers should sweep the West from the Lakes to the Mountains with the exception of a few ridings in Southern Manitoba. They will also cut some figure in Ontario where, according to unbiased students, they will carry about twenty-five seats. There are 235 seats in the House. Giving the Liberals 90 seats and the Farmers 30 seats there would be left 85 seats to be divided among the Unionists, straight Conservatives, Labor men and returned soldiers.
All of which would indicate that Sir Robert Borden is justified in hanging on to his job till he can at least find places of honor and
