HUMAN WELFARE

This is an age when people are turning their attention more to the prevention of disease than to its cure. The first work of any true philanthropist is to make the world safer so that human life may attain its highest possible development.

It is difficult to do this in an age when customs and habits are changing so rapidly. At one time people walked a great deal and thus developed physically as a result of the exercise and the inhalation of plenty of fresh air. Then came the automobile which cut down the walking to a minimum and there was danger of a very great shortening of the average life, but immediately there developed an antidote in the golf links. Golf became an obsession with the tired businessmen who had almost forgotten to walk to and from work. It took its place and added exhiliration i to the exercise thus giving much better results than the ordinary hike. It is probable that golf was not developed as an antidote to the motor car but it has proved to be an excellent one. Thus does nature help man, even in the face of a crushing Jake says that if the post office

Changed conditions also have had their effect so that today we have a large section of the people enjoying healthful exercises my stamps to stick when I lick 'em. and keeping themselves fit while a serious wastage is go- them. ing on all the time, largely as a result of modern conditions. To care for this wastage is part of the work of the physician and surgeon and his workroom is the hospital.

NEED OF THE BEST

While many who go to hospitals are the victims of their own foolishness, many are the more or less innocent victims of the conditions under which we live. They constitute a large section of the community and accommodation has to be provided so that they may get the best possible treatment and be returned to their accustomed place, able to carry on their work.

With the change in modern conditions, the use of mo- ful to say that we have no street dern appliances and the increase in knowledge, physicians car problem. and surgeons are able to accomplish marvellous cures if they have the conditions right. In this way some of the What I like about modernism is human wastage is salvaged. To do this commodious and well equipped hospitals are necessary.

Prince Rupert has a useful country hospital but it is not just the same as the winter. up to the standard required for the best possible work. The American College of Surgeons has been drawing attention to this following its annual inspection each year for a number of years. It is omitted from the approved list, which is a slur upon the institution and the people who How We Lost provide it.

What is needed today in Prince Rupert is a new hospital, well equipped. How it is to be obtained we are not suggest- a Customer ing, but it must come soon if we are to do our salvage work properly. As long as we continue conditions which produce human derelicts we must be prepared to give proper attention to their rescue and recovery.

SMITHERS

The report is heard here that a decision has been reached by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways in regard to the Peace River outlet and that it will come out to the Canadian National at Burns Lake. It would be a big thing for the central interior and Prince Rupert if the outlet should come out there but, of course, it is only a rumor.

Do You Want More Branch Factories?

What is a factory worth to Canada, that gives steady year-round employment to five thousand hands?

It depends upon where it's located, doesn't it? If it's located in Canada, it's worth a small fortune to us. But if it's located at our very borders, but still outside of Canada, it may be worth nothing at all to us. In any event, it is almost certain to be worth far less than the branch it might be persuaded to establish in Halifax, or Vancouver, or any point in between, even though that branch gave steady employment to only fifty hands!

No matter where they locate in relation to where we reside, we're always delighted to hear of branch factories being established in Canada, because of the employment they create for Canadian labour, the market they provide for Canadian farmers and Canadian merchants, and the business activity they stimulate in countless ways and in countless quarters.

Thus far, in our efforts to promote their establishment within our borders, we have made use of but one lever-our tariff. For a time it proved to be a very effective lever. During the period preceding the war the harvest was considerable. But of recent years the annual crop of branch factories has been lean-quite disappointingly so when we reflect that the justification for their establishment should be greater than ever before, due to the fact that our a limports of merchandise keep steadily increasing.

Isn't there something that each of us as individuals might do to help get the movement in full swing again? Suppose we steadfastly refused to buy merchandise that we knew to have been imported, wouldn't that cause a lot of these outside manufacturers to reconsider their plans?

Not long since, the manufacturer of an imported product, the annual sale of which in Canada runs into millions of dollars, boasted that no action this country might take would ever force him to establish a branch factory here. When he said that he was, of course, thinking only of one kind of action-tariff action! And feeling secure in the advantage of a low manufacturing cost obtained through mass production, he probably had some justification for believing that his hand could not be forced.

But he overlooked one very important point. And that is that while Canadians have always shown themselves a very tolerant people in their attitude towards imported merchandise, they are quick to resent unfairness of any kind when practised against themselves.

Now that particular manufacturer buys no materials from Canada. The workmen he employs buy nothing that has been produced in Canada. From the operation of his huge industry the people of this country derive no profit whatsoever. Why then should they continue to buy his product when there are available to them at equal prices products of the same kind, and of just as good if not better quality, that have been made in Canada?

Not only that particular manufacturer, but scores of others, could be forced to open up branch factories in this country under pain of losing their entire Canadian business, if each and every one of us, before completing a single purchase, were first to make absolutely sure that the article had been produced in Canada!

Very sincerely yours

Minister of Trade and Commerce.
