On that foundation a structure has been built with the result that the nations of the world have renounced war as a means of settling their international difficulties. In this we have witnessed one of the great miracles of history. War is outlawed. It is doomed. The moral renunciation of war will ultimately result in a reduction of armaments, and it is hoped, their abolition. As the nations organized and trained for war so must they organize and train for peace. We still suffer from our military mentality. We have yet to reach the achievement of the idealism of peace. We have arrived between the two mentalities, and the question of armaments is a problem which will find its solution in the transition of time. The idealism of one generation is the achievement of the next. "As the cause of peace advances
