On What Constitutes Wealth.

It is well known that a decided increase in the gold output of a country causes a decided increase in the price of commodities. In other words, the purchasing power of an ounce of gold lessens as the supply of gold accumulates. It is not so well known that a decided increase in the currency of a country in the form of paper money has very much the same effect. To tide over a financial crisis during the war, most governments have issued more paper money than the normal ratio to the gold reserve. Under the circumstances this may be justified, but it is of the utmost importance that the people should not be beguiled into thinking that increased currency means increased wealth, for money, be it gold or paper, is not wealth. Wealth consists in the commodities needed by the people, and these commodities can only be increased by labor expended upon the materials of nature assisted by capital in the form of machinery, etc. With fifty million men withdrawn for several years from the work of production, there is at the present moment not enough of the commodities of life in the store-houses of the world to go round. No issuing of paper money, no tinkering with the tariff, no taxing of the profiteers, no shortening of the hours of labor, no increasing of the rate of wages (however desirable many of these reforms may be) will add an extra pound of flour to the depleted store-house of the world, unless such encourages production.

In Russia the Soviet Government has been issuing paper money at a marvellous rate. Workmen have been paid big wages with Soviet money. The delusion that with plenty of such money there was no need to work has widely spread, and many factories have become disorganized and have been closed. Meanwhile, the commodities of life have been dwindling fast. Peasants are refusing to cultivate their fields only to be robbed by the idle poor, or to have offered in exchange worthless money. Not only in Russia, but in many other lands, the world shortage means that millions must perish.

Viewed in this light, profiteering on the one side, and sympathetic strikes on the other side, at this critical moment, seem a crime against humanity. Both the idle rich and the idle poor, by increasing consumption and decreasing production, are adding to the misery of the world.

Paved Streets and Permanent Grades.

During the past year or two there has been a lot of talk about paving the business section of the city and grading permanent roads and making a beginning with the sewer extensions. The city officials have been making surveys and preparing the way for action. Now it seems about time that some real work along these lines was doing. There are a number of men in the city who will be finishing up on the shipyard excavations and who could very well undertake the other work.

Everyone is aware that it takes money to make these improvements but if we are to stand still because it takes money to progress, we might as well close shop and move. We must keep up with the times. Arrivals from farther south tell of the way in which people are paving even the small towns, while we put up with conditions that are a standing disgrace. No one expects that very much will be done at once, but if we do a little all the time we shall find that we soon have a city that has a respectable appearance and along the streets of which it is possible to drive without getting mired.

Sport Briefs

Pete Herman is still the world's bantamweight champion boxer. He had no difficulty in outpointing Harold Farose in their eight-round bout at Newark on Tuesday last.

Another hero of the world's series, Joe Jackson of the White Sox led the hitters of the series with an average of .375 for the eight games, accepted 18 chances in fielding without an error, and hit the first home run of the series in the eighth game. The only trouble was there were not enough like him on the Chicago end of the series to make them interesting.

All doubts about Grover Cleveland Alexander being on with the Chicago Cubs for 1920 are now dispelled. The big right hander has just signed his contract for another campaign under the Bruin banner.

Manager Pat Moran of the Cincinnati Reds has been presented with a cheque for $5,000 for winning the 1919 series.
