During the summer of 1928 Miller startled the world when he raced the 100 yards in 9 3-5 seconds, tieing the world's record, at Pictou, Nova Scotia.

Shortly after his great run at Pictou, Miller went to Hamilton to reside. At that time he was "tapeshy" and poor at starting. The majority of his victories came through his driving speed in the stretch, although he had the bad habit of "shying" at the tape. When Miller joined the Hamilton Olympic Club he was placed under the watchful eye of competent coaches. It was not long before his startling speed. became noticeable and many big things were predicted of the "Maritime flyer."

Last year, in preference to attending the Canadian championship sports at Banff, Miller journeyed to Pictou, the scene of his record-tieing run the year before and easily defeated the cream of New England college sprinters. Before the outdoor season closed he distinguished himself in Toronto and Hamilton meets. During the indoor season of 1930 Miller came, into his own. He now has a world's indoor sprint record to his credit and has been lined up for meets during the summer with some of the outstanding sprint men across Explorers like Byrd, who work inland away from whale infested waters, have the best chance. But even Byrd can't get away from the whalers. When he went down to Little America he had to get one of them to yank his ship through the pack ice into the Ross Sea.

Experience has made the Antarctic explorers chary in their claiming. Their reports of new lands now contain perforce the saving clause, "unless the Norwegian whalers have already found it." In fact, explorers are now sign-

Any armchair explorer or drawing room scientist who challenged the truth of the late Rear-Admiral Robert E. Peary's discovery of the North Pole in 1909 will have to reckon with Captain Bob Bartlett, skipper of the Roosevelt, in which Peary nosed his way through the ice to his base at Cape Sheridan.

In an interview that crackled with picturesque verbal explosions. Peary's skipper defended the reputation of his old-time chief, and confounded recent critics of the American explorer who have expressed doubt as to his exploit.

"It is the most ridiculous example of 'the ass kicking the dead mule' that has been given to the world in the last century," says Captain Bartlett.
