Indians to Part With Relics

OTTAWA, Feb. 21: - Though it still belongs to the Blackfoot Indiuns, an old, weather-beaten, painted buffalo skull, the altar of the Sun Dance Lodge, the most sacred institution to tribesmen of the old faith, has been brought to the National Museum here.

Nothing connected with the lodge could be given or sold to anyone, the Indians said. And when Harlan I. Smith. Dominion archaeologist, asked them if they would not like to see some monument to their l old days in a great fire-proof stone building, guarded by a policeman and open to the public every day, they agreed that they would. They explained that they were powerless in the matter. It just could not be done. Then the interpreter had an idea. "Suppose you want it, you take it," he said. "But maybe you have bad luck."

Mr. Smith took it, after having made sure from three different sources that he would not affend the susceptibilities of even the oldest Indian on the reserve. They did not object to having the lodge preserved. They were, in fact, eager for it, as ceremonies connected with the old religion are now illegal and punishable by imprisonment, so that the old lodges are rapidly decaying. Long ago the Sun Dance was the most important festival in the life of the Blackfeet. It occurred during midsummer when those who had received answers to prayers uttered in grave danger took vows to perform in the dance as a sacrifice to the spirits which had saved them. Societies of both men and women, similar to lodges among white men, took turns at the dance which was usually conducted with an accompaniment of selfimposed torture, while the worshipper danced with his or her face turned upward to the sun. Periods of fasting and purification preceded the dance when the worshippers prepared themselves to meet the spirits fittingly.

Delightful after the game ~

DLAYERS find that after badminton, hockey, Curling, bowling and other athletic sports, Ovaltine helps them to relax, quickly re-builds their depleted strength and enables them to obtain the utmost benefit from their exercise.

Prepared by an exclusive process, from fresh eggs, creamy milk and ripe barley malt, one cup of Ovaltine contains the equivalent food value of three eggs or twelve cups of beef tea. Spectators also find that a cup of Ovaltine at home after the game works wonders in restoring spent nervous energy. Everybody enjoys the natural delicious flavour of Ovaltine.
