LABOR LEADS THE W

Since the beginning of civilization, the men and women who have had their shoulders to the wheel of progress have paved the way for our onward march. Today is called the machine age . . . but machines cannot function without the direction of human brains and the conditioning of human hands. Underlying the whole structure of our lives is the tireless energy and application of trained minds and skilled fingers, making miraculous refinements possible in our complex civilization. Practically none of our day's activities could be carried on without the aid of the man and woman behind the scenes . . . their efforts form the pulsebeat of our careers, and to that army of industry we owe our advancement from day to day and year to year.

It is fitting that a day should be set apart as a holiday to honor Labor. The nation could do no | better than pay homage on this day to the great aggregation of workers who keep our civilization moving-who provide life and strength for our cities, motivate our transportation, make productive our fields and extract wealth from the interior of the earth. We should never allow ourselves to become too busy to realize how dependent we are on this great factor, Labor, nor should we disparage in any degree its importance to us and to our progress. Let us pause today and think of those men and women, who, silent and unobtrusive, are forever busy clearing the path ahead of us, strengthening foundations beneath us, and aiding us to create the noble structure of our lives.
