UNUSUAL SOLDIER

General Seely, Comander of Canadian Cavalry Brigade, Tells Story of War Days

LONDON, March 12.—Major-Gen. the Rt. Hon. J. E. B. Seely, who commanded the Canadian Cavalry Brigade for the greater part of the war, has just written his life story (up to now), and given it the appropriate title of "Adventure." The last portion is entirely devoted to the period when he commanded the Cavalry Brigade. Some account of these pages has been given in a previous dispatch. General Seely has the following story of "Foghorn" Macdonald, whom he puts down as "an eccentric, and genius, too."

"He was a mining expert of distinction in Canada," says General Seely, "and having enlisted at the beginning of the war was appointed to superintend the mining operations on my front. He had a great command of language, which Canon Scott, and no one else—certainly no general—could moderate."

"Sir Arthur Currie will remember a tense interview with him. The meeting took place at the same united farm where John Redmond had found me. Currie was much worried at the weakness of our trenches, and the probability of a German attack from the Messines Ridge, which dominated our position. We discussed the various ways of meeting the difficulty with some asperity, for each man always thinks he knows his own bit of the front best. Forhorn Macdonald sat on a table in the corner of the room, swinging his legs and listening to the conversation."

"Presently Currie said: 'There is another thing. I am not at all satisfied with the place in which you put your mine, Seely. I don't believe it had been started in the right spot, and I am sure you won't get the water out. You will drown your own men without doing any harm to the enemy.'"

"At this Corporal Forhorn Macdonald, who had taken no part in the conversation, said these astonishing words, 'Look here old man Currie, you don't know the first thing about mines. I have forgotten more about them than you will ever know. You may say what you like about the rest, but don't you try telling me about the mine, just because you are the stud duck in this puddle.'"

"To Currie's eternal honor," continues General Seely, "instead of placing my eccentric friend under arrest he burst out laughing and said, 'well that has broken the spell, anyway.' Everything was then settled amicably in five minutes. It will be seen that the Canadian Army was very flexible. It found room for everybody, and managed with great success to put people to their own jobs. But let nobody think that those eccentricities relaxed real discipline. I can truly say that during the three and a half years I commanded the Canadians on the Western Front I never had a rebellious word or look, and not once was an order disobeyed."

EFFECT OF TREE PLANTING

The free distribution of forest trees to prairie farmers by the Forest Service, Department of the Interior has had one marked effect in greatly increasing the number of vegetable gardens and orchards in the prairie provinces. Until recent years comparatively few farmers grew their own vegetables or small fruits. Inspections of the last few years have shown that the great majority of owners of shelter-belts now have vegetable gardens, many are growing small fruits, and an appreciable number are planting fruit trees.
