SPORT CHAT

The executive of the Jasper city hockey league met recently and arranged all details for the coming season. Three teams comprise the league—the Elks, Native Sons and the Merchants. On Christmas afternoon the Merchants and Native Sons played and the winners will meet the Elks on New Year's afternoon. These will be exhibition games. The regular league games will start after the New Year. A strong executive has been chosen in A. C. Chemess, president; P. M. Gibbs, secretary; executive members, S. Knutson, T. Tovery, W. G. N. Johnston. Edmonton teams will be invited to play exhibition games during the winter.

The Marylebone Cricket Club, governing body of the pastime in England, has approved the whole of the recommendations made by the advisory committee relating to experiments to be tried in the County Championship for 1931. This means that if a match is finished the winning side will score 15 points, or if the scores be equal, 7½ points will be awarded each side. Otherwise points will be awarded in exactly the same way as last summer. The recommendation that for the season 1931, as an experiment, there should be no appeal against the light in first-class county cricket was also approved.

AGRARIAN NEED HERE

Dane Recommends Improved Quality, Economy Crop Rotation and Co-Operative Selling

HALIFAX, Dec. 29:—The creation of markets through improved quality, and economy, through education in the functions of fertilizers and rotation of crops, and the elimination of carelessness in utilizing by-products; these are the main elements in the agricultural system visioned by a native of Denmark, now in this country, as Canada's greatest agrarian need. The whole system would be supported and bound together by co-operative buying and selling.

These suggestions are not propounded by a professional expert in the science of farming. They are put forward by L. M. Johnson, a Guysboro county farmhand who has been in this country a year and a half, and who "coming to Nova Scotia, found its soil and climate perfect for mixed farming. Those railway agents had been right about Canada." His observations on farming methods in Canada are contained in what is virtually his first attempt in written English.

"I chose Nova Scotia," he says, "because my interest was not in wheat factories, but what we in Denmark understand by farming; that is, dairy, grain, rootfruits, gardenworks, poultry and pig-raising, all mixed together in economical ways. I came to Canada because I wanted to be my own boss, which I found difficult in my country. According to high prices on farms it would there take me quite a number of years."

Characterizing efforts to improve agricultural conditions in this country as "only trying to put patches on an old shoe instead of finding a way out," Johnson believes the way "to make a sound basis for farming in the future is to change the system or non-system under which we are working now. There is at present no solidity, nothing any man can depend on. If the farmer grows a crop it is just by luck sometimes he will get a reasonable price. Other times it is a complete failure."

Conditions Similar

Conditions on the farms of Denmark in 1880 were much the same as in this country now, he says, remarking that founding of the first co-operative dairy in his country in 1879, when conditions were at their worst, had been followed by a spread of the co-operative idea all over the country. "So at present we find co-operative dairies, slaughterhouses, egg export, firms for fertilizing and feeding supplies, and a ring of stores whose supplies are mostly manufactured in their own factories.

"I believe if the co-operation principle were taken on by Canadian farmers it would be a great help to them in getting over the crisis.

"I have heard farmers say there was no market for the products," Johnson continues. "Neither did the Dane farmers have a market when they started, but they made the market themselves by better quality in products than others, and they now produce more than ever before."

In order to grow better products and grow them profitable, he contends, it will be necessary for the farmer to learn a lot more about how to use fertilizer for different kinds of crops. As an instance, he points to the wastage of fertilizer when manure is left exposed to the sun and wind, thus losing the nitrogen through absorption in the form of ammonia. Further, it will be necessary to study the cultivation of the soil for different crops, with least loss of water in the summertime, "and how to provide the most profitable feeding, where as much of homegrown food as possible should be used, though with care that the mixture contains protein enough and not too much for the kind of animal fed."

BRIDGE IS PROCEEDING

Galloway Rapids Structure Expected to Be Finished In April Now Building Centre Span

Satisfactory progress is still being made with the construction of the bridge across Galloway Rapids and the expectation now is that the structure, which will connect Kaien Island with the mainland highway, will be completed about the month of April. Construction of the bridge is quite an engineering feat and the recent high winds have somewhat hampered operations.

The centre or principal ... now being fabricated on a temporary trestle-like structure which has been erected near the far shore of Galloway Rapids. On completion, it will be floated into place by using boats between two concrete piers which have been completed. It will be one of the largest wooden ... of its kind in British Columbia, being 202 feet long and weighing ... tons.

The recent high winds have caused some minor inconvenience around the bridge building operation. The wind makes considerable care on the part of the workmen necessary.

While the building of the bridge proceeds, grading of the road beyond Galloway Rapids is going ahead steadily.

In spite of the recent heavy rains that section of the highway between the city and Galloway Rapids has stood up quite well.
