Moral Affect

The strong point that Ald. Macdonald saw was the moral effect of sending a delegate upon the people of the Peace River.. If Prince Rupert failed to send a delegate the people of the Peace River might feel that they were not getting the support they were entitled to in advocating the outlet to this port.

Mayor Orme, speaking again, said that in a certain section of the city there were not enough water pipes to give domestic supply. The city was wondering where it was going to get the money to instal the pipes. Under the circumstances, he questioned the advisability of sending a delegate to Ottawa.

Ald. Pulllen referred to the good results that had been obtained by the mayor when he was sent last month as a delegate to Victoria. Maybe, if a delegate were sent to Ottawa, he might get similar encouragement. Ald. Pullen thought that Ald.
