GIRLS SHOULD STAY IN SCHOOL

MONTREAL, Sept. 26.—More than ever just now, when unemployment is widespread, is it difficult to persuade the 14-year-old girl that she ought not to leave school and try and find a job. This is a problem which is engaging much effort on the part of the Big Sister Association, Inc., according to a statement by Miss Frances Hains, head worker.

Another problem that the Big Sisters are faced with is that of the girls from the country and small towns who come to the city in the hope of finding work. With no jobs obtainable the result is that they are homeless and destitute. And cases of destitution among city residents are plentiful enough. One woman who came to the Big Sisters the other day had had no food for four days, and was trying to keep alive on water, it was reported.
