Prime Minister Today In British Columbia; At Revelstoke Tonight

Reiterated His Stand on Unemployment at Gathering Last Night in Alberta City—Hecklers Removed By Police From Hall

CALGARY, July 4:—After one of the most strenuous meetings that he has addressed thus far in the campaign, Premier King left for British Columbia early this morning. Tonight he will speak at Revelstoke and Saturday night in Chilliwack. Then he will go on for meetings in Victoria and Vancouver. On his return trip, the Prime Minister will again speak in the province of Alberta when he will address a meeting in the north at Edmonton.

A discussion of the unemployment situation by the Premier last night evoked a series of interruptions which finally resulted in one of the hecklers being escorted from the crowded hall by a policeman.

With respect to unemployment, the Premier once more announced the readiness of the government to assist any province in which emergency conditions prevailed. He outlined what had been done by the federal government in the way of giving money grants for various purposes to the province of Alberta and declared once again that the Dominion government had received no formal appeal for assistance from any province which found itself unable to meet unemployment conditions. If such an appeal were made, the federal government was ready to sit down with that province and try to solve the problem.

The Political Corner

Vol. 1. Friday, July 4, 1930 No. 20.

The Tories and the Fishermen

For years the fish canning interests of British Columbia knocked loudly at the door of the Liberal Government at Ottawa demanding fish traps and other concessions by which they might better "regulate" the fishermen and the fishing. In spite of these importunings, however, Mackenzie King, supported by Neill of Alberni and Fred Stork of Rupert, remained adamant in refusal.

But what a difference when the canning branch of the fisheries was transferred to Victoria. Scarcely had the transfer been made before the canning interests had their lobby working overtime knowing that their Tory friends, the Hon. M. Howe and associates could not say them nay.

And such a set of regulations they did frame. The fishermen were to be sewed up into a pocket wherein competition would be stifled and fish prices properly "regulated" to suit the cannerymen. Mr. Howe capitulated in toto and had it not been for the hue and cry raised by the fishermen, by the Liberals—both on the Fisheries Committee of the House and off—and by some of the fairer minded cannerymen themselves, Mr. Howe and the "interests" would have succeeded in their designs. As it was, the outcry was so great they were compelled to drop them.

Because some of the Howe regulations were ultra vires of the local House, representations were made for the support of the Liberal Government at Ottawa so that they might be made effective. This the Liberal Government declined to give on the ground that the Liberals stood for the "open door" policy in regard to fishing, aiming as much as possible to allow free and open competition instead of monopoly and over-regulation.

The fishermen have seen the attitude of the Liberal Government on the one hand and that of the Conservative Government on the other, and all of Mr. Brady's protests to the contrary notwithstanding, they do not wish to put themselves in the power of a political party which could father the Howe regulations.
