LOOKING BACKWARD

It is sometimes interesting to look backward, if only for a few days. Last week an Ottawa correspondent for western newspapers, named Charles Bishop, wrote of the prospects for the Quebec elections. In view of what happened readers will see the humor of the following:

"A win for the forces led by Camilien Houde, Conservative chieftain, while primarily a condemnation of the Taschereau government, would be construed, as well, as a vindication of the platform and policies of the Bennett government."

"Such a victory would be construed also as justifying the Conservative claims that, in times of great difficulty, the people turn to them."

"Most of the news coming here, at the week-end is that Houde is going to win with forecasts all the way from just nosing across the line to such a victory as would reflect a landslide."

"It is the first election, for years anyway, if not throughout the whole period of Liberal administration in Quebec, that the Conservative party, in the provincial fight, has had the complete co-operation and support of the federal party."

"Quebec presents the last stand of provincial Liberalism in power. In six of the nine provinces, already, there are Conservative local governments and two former governments, leaving only Quebec, with a Liberal predominance, now the subject of vigorous and, perhaps, victorious assault."

HUDSON BAY ROUTE

The Financial Post of Toronto discusses the possibilities of the Hudson Bay route as follows:

"There seems to be a tendency toward impatience in some quarters that a great rush of grain to market over the new Hudson Bay Railway is not to commence this year, and to blame the Dominion government for not bringing it about. There is no need for impatience. In due course, if the Hudson Bay route is a useful one for grain, it will be so used. Notions that it would bring about either lower freight rates or higher prices for grain have long since disappeared, but the line may nevertheless prove to be a highly important one."

"So far as grain traffic is concerned, Churchill may be considered to be comparable to either Port Arthur and Fort William or to Vancouver. From a very large part of Western Canada the distance to Churchill is practically the same as to the head of the lakes, and identical or almost identical freight rates apply. It is somewhat shorter from Churchill to Liverpool than from Montreal. Grain moving through the northern port will be saved transportation of approximately two thousand miles. The route will be well developed for grain carrying when ocean vessels appear there willing to carry wheat from Churchill to Liverpool for slightly less than the present cost of getting it from Fort William or Port Arthur."

"There are problems of insurance as well as problems of westbound cargoes to be settled. It is not easy to force the development of a port, which, in the long run must depend upon various people finding it profitable to themselves to make use of it. Canada had had very little luck in making a port of Prince Rupert, from which great things were expected in the early days of the Grand Trunk Pacific. The first grain elevator at Vancouver stood idle for a number of years, and was a subject for scoffing until a combination of circumstances arose which made it profitable to ship out a portion of Canada's grain through that gateway."

"The Hudson Bay Railway was demanded for many years as a grain route, but what Canada needs now are markets and not routes to market."

HAZELTON FLOWER SHOW LAST WEEK VERY SUCCESSFUL AFFAIR; SPORTS PROGRAM AND CONCERT ENJOYED.

from that time on, the game developed into what can be readily be called a pitchers' battle. The Cubs took advantage of a single in the fifth inning when Billy Sargent, who had gained second as the result of a nice hit and a stolen base, flashed past third and crossed the rubber with the first and only run of the game, as a result of Ward Marshall's single. The fans were certainly witnesses to a real treat in a beautiful exhibition of baseball, the Hazelton Cubs getting rather excited on several occasions chalking up three errors while the Smithers team managed to contribute two as their share of bad baseball, but then errors are rather hard to avoid and, considering the rest of the game, one may readily overlook such things. The highlights of the game were three sensational catches, the first being made by Jimmie Cox, the Hazelton centre fielder, who picked one from his shoestrings. The Smithers first sacker made a beautiful one-handed catch, robbing Bell of a sure single and a certain score by Cox who reposed on third base as a result of a three-bagger. Bruce McIntyre, the Cubs' shortstop, contributed the third catch when he ran about forty feet back of third base to take a high fly. George Roberts certainly deserves mention for the splendid manner in which he conducted himself on the field, always master of himself and blest with a perfect smile which goes so well with his real sportsmanlike conduct.

Concert in Evening

The concert scheduled for 7:30 was doomed to be far from on time but again the audience were to be surprised for never has Hazelton been favored with a performance that could be compared with the recent production, offered by local entertainers. A great deal of the credit for the success of the performance goes to Miss Bertha Rock and Jack Sargent, the committee in charge of the details.

The stage was nicely enclosed to give a splendid setting for the scene of the play which so fittingly brought to a close a very successful hour's entertainment.

The orchestra under the direction of Mrs. A. D. Chappell, started things moving when they rendered some splendid music as the opening number. Mrs. S. V. H. Redman followed with a violin solo which was very gratefully received by the audience. She was very ably accompanied by Rev. S. V. H. Redman at the piano. The curtains were drawn for the first time when a chorus of boys and girls offered some popular songs. These were splendid and certainly received a good deal of applause. W. E. Funnell of Prince Rupert and his specialty number proved to be something that the people seemed to like for the rafters resounded with applause. He was followed by Miss Bertha Rock whose solo proved to the audience that even in Hazelton one may find talent. Miss Rock possesses a very powerful voice and has the art of knowing just how to use it. Verne Hawkins, with his Hawaiian guitar, received approval, and the audience insisted that the Stein Song as rendered by him on the harmonica sounded very good indeed.

The final number of the evening was billed as a short sketch endeavoring to present some of the local characters of the community as the residents see them. The scene opened with George Banks, supposedly a business man of some prominence reading a local paper with the words, "Believe It or Not" appearing in bold black print across the front page, the part being very ably taken by Jack Sargent. The butler, Reeves, enters with a telegram for the master and apparently Reeves suffered from a lack of action as he dragged one foot after the other in very capable style. Frank Wheatley appeared as Reeves. Miss Bertha Rock, as the spoiled wife of the prominent businessman handled her part to perfection. Chick Sale the woman's home companion, very neatly attired in bowler hat, dark suit and white shoes entered to read an edition of a paper that bore the name of "Weekly Squeak" in very bold black letters. The man about town was represented by Jimmie Adams. The scene ended with the husband and Chick in a duel which resulted in their deaths and allows the butler and Mrs. Banks to embrace each other and thus proving that even a butler may be named as co-responsible.

A dance followed the concert and judging from the number in attendance every one enjoyed themselves. The day, considering the lovely weather and the beautiful flowers in conjunction with the other attractions made the Flower Show day at Hazelton a tremendous success.
