Lady May Cambridge is the daughter of the Earl of Athlone and Pricess Alico, Countess of Athlone. Apart from the fact the bride is so closely related to the King and Queen this wedding has attracted phenomenal amount of pleasurable interest. The Earl of Athlone ad a memorable tenure of office as Governor-General of South Africa, and Lady May Cambridge shares to the full the gracious qualities which her mother, Princess Alice, has always exhibited. Lady May's gradmothers, the late Duchess of Albany (mother of the Countess of Athlone) and the Duchess of Teck (mother of Queen were perhaps the most popular per-freely believed that the majority of the women are in favor of the Nationalist government.

Meantime the hectic campaign continues and a rest on Sunday will precede the last campaign day on Monday. Police are taking special precautions throughout the country to guard against disorders.

Although less than ten years ago only 20,000,000 persons in Great Britain had the vote, 30,000,000 will be entitled to register their opinions at the polls in the general election. The chief reason for the increase is the lessening of the restrictions on the women's franchise, the granting of the "flapper vote," putting five million new voters on the lists at one bound. In the last general elections, 1929, the electorate totalled 28,943,566, of whom more than 22,000,000 exercised their vote. The women numbered 1,611,699 more than the men.
