THE FALL FAIR

While doubtless many local merchants were disappointed at the amount of business done during fair week, and some are questioning whether it was worth while or not, we do not think they should look at this annual event only from its financial aspect. As a public institution it has considerable educative value and its scope is capable of extension.

This year the display of flowers at the fair was a revelation to many. Some of the prize-winning blooms have been grown in miniature back yards and in small garden patches that are never seen by the general public. They are not the product of professionals but of amateurs who delight in their work. The flower show has been a means of making these flowers available to the people generally. One man remarked he did not know where all those fine flowers could come from but he might have also been informed that had all the flower growers taken an interest in the show there would have been twice as large a display as was seen this week.

FLOWER SHOW PROPOSED

Flower growers have been discussing the possibility of a flower show earlier in the season. It would be staged in one of the down town halls and would be devoted wholly to flowers and plants and might even include educative addresses and moving pictures of flowers. This would not interfere with the display at the fair as a month earlier quite a different lot of flowers would be in bloom. Early dahlias, asters, stocks, gladiolas and other flowers would be ready and the first crop of roses would be at their best. There would be a better chance of the weather being favorable and as the show would be devoted wholly to the one object, the people visiting it would not be feeling the call of the sideshows or the hot dog stand while inspecting the flowers. If staged the event would be under the auspices of the flower society.

It has been suggested that prizes might be awarded for the best kept gardens at the time of the show.

CALLING FOR TENDERS

The department of marine when it calls for tenders goes around like a thief in the night and announces its need in such a manner that the majority of people will not know about it. It posts up a notice in one or two so-called public places instead of putting the advertisement in the newspaper where it belongs and paying for it like any other respectable business person. It and the post office department are the worst offenders in this matter of paying for its publicity. It is doing a 1931 business in an eighteenth century manner.

This system of refusing to call for public tenders through the newspapers came in for condemnation in connection with the sale of boats by the department. The system was condemned by a public meeting of fishermen in this city. It leads to suspicion that some graft is going on and that the department wishes only its friends to know that tenders are asked. When a contract running into many thousands of dollars is asked it is hardly fitting to refuse to pay the modest fee that is charged for a small notice in the newspapers.

We do not blame the members of the government for this state of affairs. It is a departmental matter coming under the purview of A. Johnston, deputy minister of marine at Ottawa, who is the chief offender. No matter which government was in power, the department has been in the habit of doing this in the same manner, an underhand, secretive manner, that should not be tolerated in a democratic country. It is no wonder that the public is suspicious of governments when they do their business in that way.
