THE BRITISH SITUATION

Stanley Baldwin, leader of the Conservatives in Great Britain, is deserving of great praise for agreeing to take a position in the new coalition cabinet, serving second to Premier Ramsay MacDonald. He is the leader of a great party, which under ordinary conditions would be expected to win at the forthcoming general elections. By waiting a short time he stood a good chance of gaining political fame and power. By entering the MacDonald government he may be losing his opportunity.

But there is a crisis in Great Britain. It has been found impossible to balance the budget unless it is by placing a tariff on imports. This has been of late a Conservative party policy as opposed to Liberal free trade with Labor somewhat divided. Now it is to be assumed that a tariff will be adopted and that the coalition government will father it and possibly stand the next election on that policy. Whether or not they will succeed remains to be seen. The coalition may break up when it comes to an election.

In any case it looks as if the various British statesmen were doing well to sink their party affiliations in order to bring about a better condition in the old land. Politics should never be allowed to interfere with good government.

FORGET POLITICS

In Canada, especially in the villages and smaller towns, there is a tendency to play politics all the time. We suggest that is wrong. Why not forget politics, at any rate between elections? No good can be obtained by continually harking back to the past campaign. There are certain governments in power and they are supposed to represent the whole community, not a part of it. Tolmie is the premier of British Columbia not premier of the Conservative party. Bennett is Prime Minister of Canada, not prime minister of the federal conservative party. Because of that fact, it is the duty of all people in the country to lend him their support so far as possible. Helpful criticism is all right but not party criticism based on the hypothesis that our side is always right and the other side always wrong.

YES, BUT NOT LIKE RUPERT

When wandering through the interior of the province on a recent holiday, the editor took considerable interest in the gardens he saw at the various points. Sometimes he took occasion to compliment the owners on the results being accomplished. Usually the reply was something like this. "Our gardens are doing well but they are not like those in Prince Rupert." To tell the truth about ourselves, we are getting a name for our gardens and the person who does not run true to form by keeping his garden presentable is not typical of the city. A good garden is expected, especially by visitors from the outside.

ENTER THE FAIR

The success of the fall fair which opens next week depends almost wholly on the individual efforts of the citizens. A few people make a rule of entering their poultry, their flowers, their cooking, their preserves, their needlework, their garden produce. The majority of the people take no interest. When fair day arrives people are heard to remark: "I could beat that. If only I had thought to enter, I could easily have won that prize."

This is written to suggest that any person with a nice plant take the trouble to enter it. That anyone doing unusually good work in any line of endeavor exhibit a sample of it. That all take an interest in the fall fair, enter what they have and see if they cannot win a prize. The money value of the prize may not be large but the honor of winning the blue ticket is worth a great deal in personal satisfaction.

Grizzly Bear Goes to Zoo

Three Months Old Cub Shipped From Jasper to England

JASPER PARK, Aug. 25.—Screaming defiance to the world and unbeknown to himself, bidding a last goodbye to the timbered slopes of his beloved mountains, a three months old grizzly cub, offspring of some mighty monarch of the Canadian Rockies, left here last night by Canadian National Express, en route to England and the confines of an English zoo.

The bear cub was captured last spring by the vice-president of Vickers Limited, famous English armament firm, who shot the mother grizzly while on a hunting trip west of here. Mr. Vickers left the cub in charge of George Hargreaves, his guide, at Jackman, B.C., and only recently ordered the bear shipped to him in London, Eng.
