BRITISH ELECTION.

The British election was a tremendous expression of public opinion in favor of a business government. The people voted for the party with a policy and against the group that stood for a continuation of the high dole and the drift into financial ruin. The majority for the National government, headed by Premier Ramsay MacDonald is so large as to be unwieldy and dangerous. To have opposition practically wiped out is something wholly new in British politics.

It is to be assumed now that the present government will proceed to carry out its policy of protecting home industries and of balancing its budget. Already it is said there is a turn in the tide of affairs and unemployment is less than it was a few months ago. What the country undoubtedly needs is to have all her people producing, earning honest money for themselves instead of subsisting on stipends paid from the public funds. The British people are tired of the dole and the expression of opinion yesterday was a clear indication that their system has not been a success, for it has not met with the approval of the workers themselves.

LLOYD GEORGE LIBERALS.

Possibly the most pathetic figure in the new House of Commons will be Right Hon. David Lloyd George, former Premier, who stands alone, stripped of his following, leader of a lost cause.

And yet, as we look back and see the little Welshman coming to the rescue of his country in the time of her war time need amid the applause of all the people; as we see him going out to settle labor disputes, to urge greater production so that the country might win in the great struggle in which they were engaged, we must admit that he was then one of the Empire's greatest men. And today as we see him standing almost alone there in his old age, firm for what he believes is right, we admire him just as much as ever. Possibly he sees the humor of the situation. We hope he does. And we think, too, that if he died today he would receive one of the greatest funerals that ever a Britisher was given and everyone would say what a wonderful man he has been.

RAMSAY MACDONALD.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald will be a proud man today. After having been expelled from the Labor party and been persuaded to seek another safer seat he decided to fight it out in his own constituency and justify himself among his own people who had trusted him before. Many feared that he would be beaten, but most people were pleased to read in the bulletins his morning that the leader of the government was elected.

WHAT OF THE SOVIET?

People who read recently of the distorted and abbreviated news despatches that are allowed to be published in Russia will be wondering how much the people of the Soviet Union will know today of the result of the elections in Great Britain. How will the Soviet officials explain it? I will be a great jar to their hopes and expectations. While the communistic vote is said to be slightly larger at this election than in the last, it is almost negligible. Russia may now definitely write off Britain from the list of countries likely to follow in its footsteps, for many years at any rate.

CANNING TO HELP POOR

Movement by Women, Preserving
Fruits and Vegetables, Spreads in Ontario

TORONTO, Oct. 27.—"The way in which the women of Ontario have applied the idea of 'canning bees' to preserve foods for the families of the unemployed should be an inspiration to all, and an example to the men who monopolize government positions," said the Globe in a recent editorial.

The Globe some days ago recorded the fact that the women of Missouri had organized volunteer groups who were busy conserving on a large scale fruits and vegetables which will be needed this winter. S. C. Tweed, M.L.A., publicly urged Ontario women to do likewise. The response has been afforded a striking contrast to the dilatory methods of governments.

In various centres women leaders are busy. Housewives are donating spare jars as well as giving their services for the actual work. In some cases foods are supplied free by volunteers; in others, vegetables, fruits and supplies are being purchased at present low prices. But the work is going forward, whatever the particular method used.

It is interesting to compare the different technique of men and women in times of emergency. The men have been arguing about putting the unemployed to work on the trans-Canada highway for the past fourteen months. Yet nothing has been done. No sooner do women approve an idea than they get busy and apply it. Men like to do their talking before they start work. Women start work before they start talking.

Grant Is Asked

The National Council of Women, prominent in this movement, has asked the city of Toronto for a grant of $2,500 in order to purchase produce from the markets which will be preserved at their expense and used during the winter to help out the supplies of the House of Industry. Mrs. A. M. Huestis stated that though they could get a considerable amount of fruit from the farms it was not to be expected they could get it all for nothing.

"Please make it clear to the public that the movement of the emergency committee will not hurt the retail trade," said members of the committee. "It will rather help it, if any. We have created a canning popularity over the city that should help trade."

The women are delighted that the Domestic Science Centres are to contribute to the supply of canned and preserved fruit. "What I like about it," said a member of the committee, "is that the girls are being taught to do up fruit and incidentally get a lesson in charity. Fruit and vegetables are necessary in the diet, and it has come to our notice that so frequently they are left out of the poor man's diet."

Generous offers of fruit and vegetables, both in reality and in promise, were reported by a member of the emergency conservation committee in charge of the receiving and distributing depot at Spadina and Dundas Streets.

NEWS OF THE MINES

AROUND PRINCE RUPERT

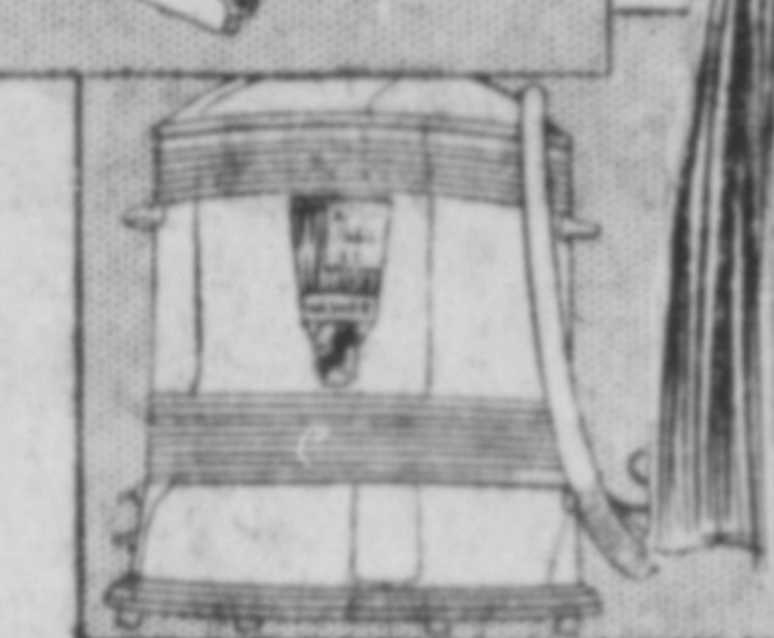

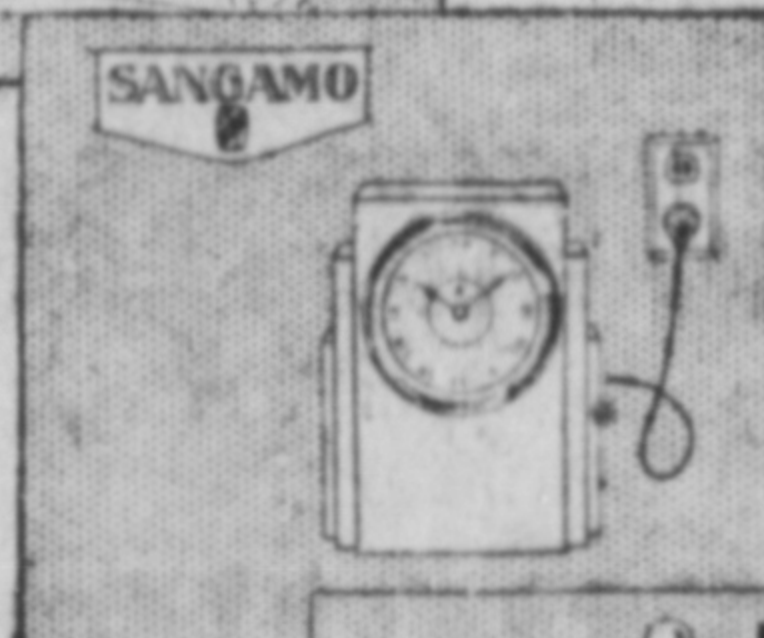

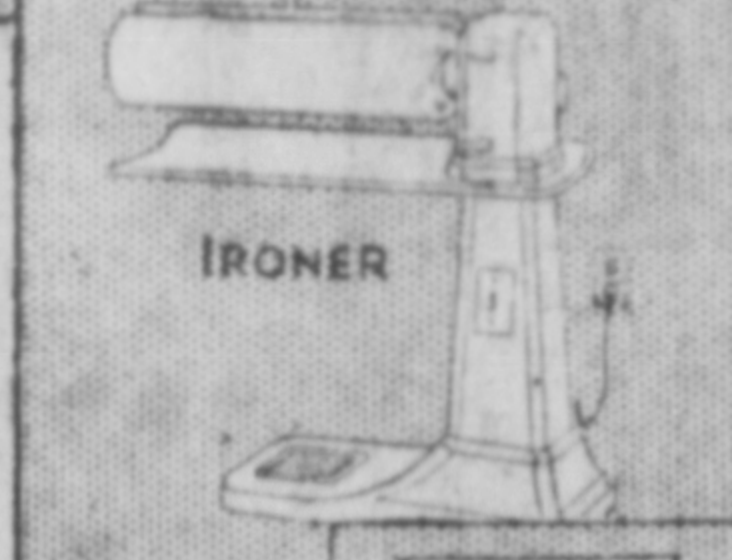

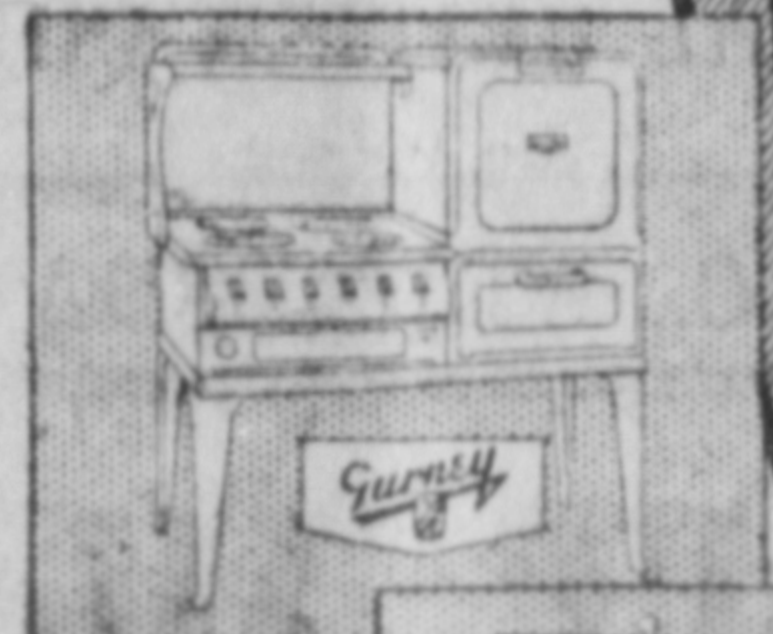

Exhibit of Taku Ores — New Strike on Nation River—Spent Summer in Atlin District

A splendid exhibit of ore from the Taku River district is on view at present at the headquarters of the British Columbia Chamber of Mines in Vancouver. The ores were sent by D. J. McDougall of Tulsequah and were gathered from various properties in the Taku region. Included in the lot are samples of antimony ore from the Whitewater gold group, which is attracting such a lot of interest just now, copper from the Tulsequah Chief and Manville groups, and silver-lead from the Banker, Erickson-Ashby and Silver Bell groups.

A new gold strike has been made in the Nation River district by Edward Small of the Stuart River district. He has staked a piece of ground which looks very interesting. Charles English, Lowell Smith and Joseph Seaforth have also staked claims. Mr. Small has brought a rich sample of the gold to Vancouver and he is confident that the strike will prove a most valuable proposition.

James Anderson, after having spent the past summer in the Atlin district with a gold dredging outfit, has arrived at Anyox. He is a brother of John A. Anderson, road superintendent for Atlin district.
