PARADE TO CATHEDRAL

do not end war, then war will end our civilization."

Looking back over the 13 years since the Armistice had been signed, one reviewed with a certain amount of disappointment what had been done. There were actually more men under arms on the European continent today than there had been in 1913. Many nations of Europe still held the view that security could only be based on a preponderance of armed force. Consequently the process of disarmament was painfully slow.

Notwithstanding the difficulties however, which lay in the path of world peace, much progress had been made. The Dean pointed to the fact that nearly sixty nations were now pledged against war—the Kellogg Pact had been signed the World Court at The Hague had been imbued with greater authority, foreign occupation of Germany had been ended, naval competition between United States Great Britain and Japan had been terminated by the signing of the London Naval Treaty, the Balkan States had met in conference and had adjusted their relations, the constitution of the League of Nations had been brought in harmony with the Kellogg Pact. All were very significant factors.

There could be no way to lasting peace, however, declared the preacher, without the vision of God. There could be no solution without a change of heart and a change of spirit between men and nations.

"Let the living, looking back on the dead thinking of the future resolve that, for their sakes, we sanctify ourselves to let sacrifice answer sacrifice. These men being dead yet speak and their message is simply this: 'Be ye dedicated to carry on complete and crown the work we have begun until the day has dawned when peace shall over all the world its ancient splendor spread'."

Sergeant W. J. Service, chief of the city detachment of the provincial police, and Mrs. Service sailed last night on the Prince George, for Vancouver, on escort duty.

'Adam and Fallen Man' Is Sunday Science Subject

The subject of the lesson sermon in all Christian Science churches and societies on Sunday was "Adam and Fallen Man."

Among the Bible texts included in the lesson-sermon was the following from I. Corinthians 15:22: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

The lesson-sermon also included the reading of citations from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, one passage being as follows: "As in Adam (error) all die, even so in Christ (Truth) shall all be made alive. The mortality of man is a myth, for man is immortal."
