MADE MISTAKE ON A PULLMAN

Story Told in Prince George
Paper of two Local Contractors.

The following story of an amusing incident occurring on a Pullman car on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad between here and Prince George is told in a recent issue of the Prince George Herald:

Two railway contractors boarded the train near Prince Rupert. They had secured lower berths, opposite each other, in the sleeper. The younger of the two was tired and retired early in the evening. The elder remained reading in the observation car quite late.

Just before he was about to turn in, the train stopped at a small station and a girl entered the observation car. She was young and she was beautiful. Soon the sleeping car conductor entered. The beautiful lady requested a lower berth. Alas! they were all taken.

Innate Chivalry.

Anyone familiar with railway contractors will readily surmise the immediate awakening of the contractor's innate chivalry, which is so characteristic of the big-minded men who build railways. He had heard the lady's plea. Could he sit calmly by whilst this charming person, on the verge of tears, contemplated clambering into an upper berth? No, a thousand times no! He would sooner sleep in one of his own steam shovels.

In a few well-chosen words he placed his own lower berth at the lady's disposal and accepted her upper, which happened to be directly overhead. She offered him radiant thanks. He gallantly made light of the exchange. They bade each other good-night, and shortly afterwards were both wrapt in the arms of Morpheus.

So the night passed. Morning came, and the young contractor, ignorant of his friend's concession to beauty in distress, awoke like a giant refreshed, and seated on the edge of his berth, drew on his shoes.

A Form.

Suddenly opposite to him a form appeared moving behind the curtain of his friend's berth.

Being full of joie de vivre, etc., he leaned over and struck what he took to be a well-defined portion of his friend's anatomy a most resounding smack outside the curtains.

Immediately a terrible falsetto scream sounded through the car. The young contractor was trained to think fast in an emergency. He ducked back into his berth and closed the curtains before the enraged beauty had opened her own, and stood, a charming picture of virtuous indignation, "en deshabille," in the aisle.

Piercing Scream.

The elder contractor was awakened from a deep slumber by a piercing scream below him. In an instant his head peered forth. Below him the curtains were agitated by a furious lady who finally emerged, looked at him with a terrible regard.

"You hit me!" she cried furiously. "Oh, you hurt me! You brutal! Oh, Oh, Oh!"

The dining car conductor, attracted by the lady's cries, hastened to the spot.

"He hit me," she cried, aiming a denunciatory finger at the bewildered gentleman on the top shelf, with one hand, while she gently pressed the other to the scene of the attack. "Oh, he hit me so hard! He's a brute!"

"Did you?" queried the conductor.

"I don't know what she's raving about," replied the victim.

The conductor tried to pacify the lady. Nothing could shake her faith in her benefactor's guilt. It quite ruined his trip.

And in the dark recesses of the opposite berth the culprit lay doggo, half a pillow stuffed in his mouth, convulsed with silent mirth.

Th dirty dog!
