Montreal Man Is Surgeon-General Of U. S. Army

MONTREAL, June 4.—Appointment by the United States government of Col. R. U. Patterson, M.D., formerly of Montreal, to the position of surgeon-general of the United States Army, was recently announced and has created considerable interest in this city.

Widely known here, especially in the world of medicine, Colonel Patterson is a graduate of medicine of McGill University and is a former house surgeon of the Montreal General Hospital. Classmates of his medical school days here include such well known Montreal physicians and surgeons as Dr. C. A. Peters, Dr. W. L. Barlow, Dr. F. W. Harvey and Dr. J. F. Finnie.

Colonel Patterson spent his youth in Montreal. He graduated from the Montreal High School and studied medicine at McGill University, graduating from there in 1898. The following year he became house surgeon at the Montreal General Hospital.

In 1900, Colonel Patterson joined the United States Army and for a few years was in charge of Red Cross work in the Philippines. During the Great War and upon participation of the United States in the conflict, Colonel Patterson went to France, where he was put in charge of a large hospital at Boulogne. When the American Army reached Europe he became chief surgeon of a military division and in charge of a general hospital in the Casino at Boulogne. He was mentioned in British Army dispatches several times.

At the close of the war, Colonel Patterson returned to America where he remained attached to the United States Army medical staff, with headquarters in Washington. In recognition of his ability as a physician and surgeon and of his services during the war, the government has appointed him surgeon-general of the United States Army, the highest medical post in that body.
