REVISES LIST OF BEST BOOKS

Bible Still Leads But Shakespeare Is Low; Koran Comes Second

LONDON, July 21.—Years ago the list of the "Best Hundred Books," compiled by the late Sir John Lubbock (afterwards Lord Avebury), was a recognized standard for all striving after "self-improvement." The Saturday Review recently asked its readers to revise this list. The results are interesting. Dr. Smiles' "Self-Help," and Taylor's "Holy Living and Dying" have no followers nowadays it seems. On the other hand Keble's "Christian Year" and Lytton's "Last Days of Pompeii" still have admirers. "Westward Ho" finds a good place in the revised list, and "East Lynne" is not entirely forgotten.

Amongst more modern authors Hardy seems to be more favored than Meredith. Shaw, Bennett, Galsworthy, Chesterton and Barrie are well supported, but Wells is admitted rather for his merits in his historical writing than in story telling.

The winning list of "Best Hundred Books" begins with the Bible, followed by "The Koran," "Aesop's Fables" comes eleventh. "The Imitation" is twenty-first, "Arabian Nights," twenty-third, Shakespeare, twenty-sixth, "Pilgrim's Progress," thirty-fifth. Dickens and Thackeray occupy sixtieth and sixty-first place respectively with "Pickwick Papers" and "Vanity Fair." Ruskin comes eightieth with his "Seven Lambs," and Newman eighty-first with his "Apologia." Final place in the hundred is given to the "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes."

A request from Mrs. J. B. Gibson asking the city to consider an exchange of lots will be taken up with her further by the city council. It is possible that a lot on a constructed street may be provided, supposing Mrs. Gibson is willing to pay the cost of moving the house.

Black Magic Has No Appeal to the Winnipeg Police

License Refused to Man Who Would Cure Fits by Curious Rites

WINNIPEG, July 21.—City officials, including members of the police force, are the most unsympathetic and sceptical people in the world, in the opinion of at least one Winnipeg citizen, who, even though he has a "sure" cure for epileptic fits, has been unable to secure a license to perform his "black magic" ceremony in the city.

The would-be doctor, certain that his remedy would result in a perfect cure, came to central police station Thursday afternoon, and asked that he be granted a license to "do his stuff." Scores in the city were suffering from this derad malady, he declared, and it was only right that they should be given an opportunity of receiving his treatments. Already, in other cities, he had cured several children and adults by his magic rites.

Police, however, were curious, and before issuing him a permit, insisted on knowing what it was all about.

"Well," the would-be physician replied, "It's like this: First I get a lock of hair with pieces of his finger nails, which have been clipped off. Then I turn to the east at sunrise, uttering several mystic prayers. After that I turn to the house in which the patient resides, continuing to utter these never-failing prayers.

Details of Cure

"The patient," he continued, "is placed against the door where the hinges are attached. Pieces of the hair and finger nails are carefully wrapped up, and placed between the door frame and the door, just above the patient's head, being securely fastened with a peg of poplar wood."

Next he told the authorities: more prayers are said, the patient's body being thoroughly rubbed by the acting physician. And, believe it or not, he declared, within a short time the patient is entirely cured.

And even though he possessed this miraculous remedy, the poor, would-be doctor, whose aim in life is to lessen the suffering of mankind, was refused a license. Before going to the police station, he had been to the city hall, but officials there, after hearing his story, decided to let the police in on the secret.

FIVE YEARS FOR ARSON

institution, declaring the fire had been set "simply for devilment."

"I have no regrets that the building was burned," he said, "but I am extremely sorry that the students were injured. I hadn't thought a fire would burn so fast."

"I could give you life imprisonment for this offence," declared Magistrate Williams, "but in view of your youth and your previous good reputation I will only give you five years in Prince Albert Penitentiary."

Thompson had been followed from Lacombe to Edmonton, from Edmonton to Vancouver, from Vancouver to Portland, and back to his home at Harmattan, near Oids, where he was arrested recently.

Shortly after his arrest Thompson gave a full confession, telling of his movements on the evening of the fire. He was recently arraigned before Magistrate Williams, and pleaded guilty, but sentence was withheld pending the arrest of his accomplice.

Full Confession
According to crown evidence,

Oliver Pangman, 26, also a student of the college, had prepared the oil-soaked shavings and procured the oil which Thompson used in his criminal fire-setting.

Pangman was arrested recently and brought to the city to answer to the arson charge as an accomplice. He pleaded guilty but maintained that he had not premeditated the action but "acted on the spur of the moment" in assisting Thompson, stating that he was "extremely sorry." Character witnesses showed him of previous good character.

"You were the older man and should have known better," stated Magistrate McLeod in passing sentence. "In my opinion you caused the crime to a considerable extent by encouraging Thompson. Were it not that Thompson, who actually set the fire, had received but five years, I should give you a heavier sentence."

He sentenced Pangman to four years in Prince Albert with hard labor.

The yacht Pride of the West arrived in port yesterday with a number of commercial men aboard.
