Germs in Every Print

that we all leave finger prints on everything we touch. Most of these prints are germ-laden. We pick them up from others - by handshakes-by touching things they have touched. Then we convey them to the mouth, where they breed and so get into the system.

Life Extension Institute lists 27 diseases which may be conveyed in this way. The most common is a cold. A hand used to check a sneeze or a cough may convey germs to others.

We cannot escape these germs. Every hand-shake, every touch conveys them. The best we can do is to kill these germs before they reach our food.

Lifebuoy Soap is made to do this. Millions of people, in all countries of the world, protect themselves in this way. No perfume, but a scent of safety which tells you it purifies and yet disappears in a few minutes. And Lifebuoy contains a germicide. Countless laboratory tests have
