SUSPENSION SPAN TEST

Squaws Were Sent Ahead to Test Bridge Before Warriors and Hunters Cross

HAZELTON, Aug. 11.—A traditional custom for retaining numerical fighting and hunting strength of an Indian tribe was recalled by pioneers upon completion of a steel bridge over Hagwilget Canyon, near here.

The bridge, one of the main links in the proposed Alaska Highway, is the longest and highest bridge of its kind in British Columbia, 260 feet above the swirling river, and required 1,000,000 pounds of steel and cable and six miles of 1½-inch wire rope to complete.

It is located on a historical site, where many years ago Indians built two wooden structures a few feet above the water.

Tribesmen, in order to spare a warrior and hunter, sent their squaws on ahead to test the strength of the span every time they were to cross it.

If it bore the weight of the squaw then it was safe—if it didn't the warriors did not cross.

Indians later built a spider-web suspension bridge across the narrow neck near the upper end of the deep canyon, using wire. This suspension bridge was used for many years until the government constructed a steel bridge with wooden towers, which was later replaced by the present structure.

E. P. Miller, secretary-treasurer of the Dominion Trust Co., Vancouver, is a visitor in the city. In an interview he expressed great surprise and admiration for Prince Rupert district. "When I return to Vancouver I will be a great booster for this district," he said.

Sheriff John Shirley and his brother, George Shirley, have had great success in gardening on their lots on Taylor Street near Fulton Street. Cherry trees, strawberries, peas, cauliflowers, maples and many other plants are thriving and they have one of the show places of the town.

Sam Rastovich was injured when a derrick was lifting a rock on Vernon Smith's grading contract at Seal Cove this morning and is now a patient in the hospital.

STEWART

The recent compilation of the provincial voters' list showed that there was a loss of 323 names for Atlin electoral district. The total of the 1928 list was 1815 names while the list just completed contains only 1492 names.

Some 75 local members of the Moose Lodge and their families held a big jamboree in the park here last Wednesday night. Howard Campbell, dictator of the lodge here, was at the head of affairs.

Provincial Constable Lance Potterton and Frank Lewis took advantage of the low tides last week to make another search for the body of William Curtis, who was drowned on the night of July 20 last while returning to shore from the United States cruiser Detroit. Although the west side of the canal was scoured for some 15 or 20 miles, no trace of the body could be found.

J. O. Lyons closed up his butcher shop here last week and contemplated making a trip south. He will reopen the shop when business conditions improve and, meantime, has not lost any of his confidence in the future of Stewart.

The Stewart Board of Trade has elected officers as follows for the ensuing year: President, E. T. Applewhite; vice-president, George Hills; secretary, P. S. Jack; council—F. E. Risch, W. L. Newell, H. P. Gibson, Howard Campbell, D. J. McLean, M. P. Murphy, W. R. Tooth, H. W. M. Rolston, W. D. Smith and H. D. Rochford.

The Bear River road extension is included in the provincial government's unemployed relief program according to a telegram received here last week from Hon. R. W. Bruhn, minister of public works.

A total of 125 registrations for unemployment relief have already been made in Stewart.

Good progress is being made on the widening and improving of the Salmon River road, the work having now been completed as far as Texas Creek bridge. Johnson, Gardner & Co. have the contract from the United States government.
