A FRIEND IN THE SOUTH.

George Wilson, formerly business manager of this paper, who has recently taken over the Mining and Industrial Record, published in Vancouver, in his recent number urges support for the northern part of the province. He says:

"British Columbia is a great province with a sturdy people scattered through its length and breadth. They make the existence of Vancouver as a city possible, yet the province of British Columbia is no back-yard for the city of Vancouver as is indicated so frequently.

"Let us encourage these pioneers of this generation. They are loyal buyers of B. C. products—made in Vancouver chiefly. In return let Vancouver people invest their money in B. C., in the interior of B. C., in Northern B. C. If it is cheaper to haul the Peace River wheat to Prince Rupert, or even Stewart, don't let Vancouver delay the business by trying to hog everything. Even the C.P.R. can run into Prince Rupert any time it wants to over the C.N.R. tracks, and so gets its share. If a new factory wants to locate in B. C., Vancouver will profit even if it be located not quite within the city limits. Let Vancouverites spend their holidays and their money within their own province and permit the interior people to make a cent off them once in a while, even if it is only once. They need it. Buying B. C. products applies to more than manufactures. It means buying the service of the other half of the population of the province that prefers to live outside of the Vancouver area.

"What do they know of British Columbia who only Vancouver know?"

ADVERTISING PRINCE RUPERT.

The Power Corporation of Canada, parent company of the Northern B. C. Power Company, in its annual reports gives a page to the financial statement of the local power company and publishes two interesting pictures, one of the Cold Storage plant and the other of the local drydock and shipyard. All this tends to put Prince Rupert on the financial map.

STORY OF FR. DUNCAN

Vancouver Province Retraces Tale of Old and New Metlakatla

(Vancouver Province)

The death of Theodore Dundas, an aged Indian, on Annette Island, Alaska, recalls an interesting incident in British Columbia history—no less than the wholesale emigration of a settlement from Canadian to American soil. The story of the two Metlakatlas has a place in both the political and ecclesiastical history of the Pacific Coast.

The story begins back in the fifties of last century, before the Fraser gold rush and before there was a colony of British Columbia. Captain James C. Prevost, in command of H.M.S. Virago, on this coast, about 1854, was a deeply religious man and was shocked at the conditions prevailing among the Indians. On his return to England he told the Church Missionary Society of conditions and urged the desirability of sending a missionary. The society responded, and when Captain Prevost returned to the Pacific in 1856 as a member of the Northwest Boundary Commission, he brought with him William Duncan, a young schoolmaster, charged by the Missionary Society with the task of establishing Christianity among the Tsimshians.

Duncan began his work at Port Simpson in the fall of 1857. His task was onerous. He had to learn the language, which was difficult, and set himself at the same time to combat cannibalism and other barbarous practices prevalent among the Indians and to inculcate the principles of Christianity. The missionary's Christianity was practical, and he quickly saw that he had to improve the material condition of the Indians before he could hope to do much toward bettering them morally and spiritually. With the idea of setting his people on their feet industrially, Duncan, in 1862, moved all those Indians who would follow him and would subscribe to his rules to Metlakatla, 17 miles from Port Simpson, and there built a model village. The village was pretty much a self-contained unit with the missionary as ruler. There were shops and storehouses, a salmon cannery and a sawmill, a church and a schoolhouse. The Indians were all trained as small farmers, but there were carpenters, blacksmiths and merchants among them, too. Within a year the population reached a thousand. The Church Missionary Society maintained its interest and sent out several ordained missionaries to take charge of the work. But these either got ill and withdrew or went to establish missions elsewhere, and Duncan, who was not a clergyman, remained in sole charge. From time to time, clergymen from the outside administered the rite of

WHO'S WHO

(By Gee)

George C. Rooke

ONE of the great anxieties of visitors to huge exhibitions is the result of the lack of or indefinite information regarding suitable accommodation for meals and lodging. When the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference opens at Regina in 1932 these two very important matters will have been considered and provided for.

A special accommodation committee has been constituted to look after these important details and under the chairmanship of George Cyril Rooke, of Regina, is busily engaged in seeing to it that ample accommodation will be available when the thousands of visitors expected in 1932 reach the capital city of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Rooke, who is the senior partner in the chartered accountancy firm of G. C. Rooke & Company, was born at Durham, England, in 1883. Coming to Canada his education was directed toward accountancy and he is an F.C.A. and B.Acc. of the University of Saskatchewan.

Here are some of the public activities of the man whose central interest in the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference is to see that all visitors are assured of adequate accommodation: Past president of the Regina Board of Trade, Regina Rotary Club, Saskatchewan Institute of Chartered Accountants, District Governor Rotary International District No. 4, president 1930-31 of the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants.

Mr. Rooke served with the 2nd C.M.R. in the South African War. He founded his present business in 1912 and for some years prior was associated with several large commercial institutions of Saskatchewan in accounting work. He has served on the Senate of the University of Saskatchewan in accounting. He is an active member of the Assiniboia Club, the Wascana Country Club, the Wascana Badminton Club and Emulation Lodge, A.F. & A.M.

baptism. Otherwise, Duncan carried on as priest and magistrate, mayor and industrial czar, and the village flourished and became famous. Services were conducted in the church, but the service varied from that of the Anglican Church Society and the Church Missionary Society knew this. Duncan had very strong views on certain subjects, and one of them was that the Indians could not be made to understand the significance of the Christian communion. They were too near cannibalism and too prone to look on religious rites as charms.

Has Strong Views

All went well until Rev. William Ridley was made Bishop of Caledonia in 1879 and established himself at Metlakatla. The bishop had just as strong views as the missionary and the views of the two didn't coincide. Friction developed almost from the first. In the beginning it concerned religious matters, but it spread to other things until it embraced the whole of Metlakatla and its industries and interests.

For years the quarrel went on, and at last the Church Missionary Society removed the missionary from his post. A least it thought it was removing him. But Mr. Duncan, with the encouragement and assistance of influential friends at Victoria, visited Washington, laid his case before the authorities there and secured permission to move his whole village, or such part of it as would go with him, to Annette Island on the Alaska side of the boundary. So, in 1887, the new Metlakatla was established, the majority of the Indians following their leader. Duncan, greatly mourned by his Indian friends, died a few years ago. Theodore Dundas, whose passing is now recorded, was one of the Indians who accompanied him on his migration.
