LONDON, Jan. 19: - Dramatic changes in world transport and communications are foreshadowed in the building, on the banks of the River Medway at Rochester, Kent, of a slipway where flying boats larger than any yet to take the air may be erected and launched.

Aided by the extensive development of metal construction methods, which have removed limitations inevitably prevailing when wood was the material on which the aircraft builder chiefly depended, flying boat designers have planned Greek embassy in Berlin, is during the last few years craft worthy indeed to be styled "flying ships," and there is no indication that the process of growth is yet nded. Two air boats now under construction in British factories! will each weigh when fully loaded no less than 30-35 tons, and considcrably larger vessels, up to 90-100 tons, are contemplated. Flying machines of this order of size cannot be erected inside the largest sheds. Their overall height from keel to the top of the superstructure is too great.
