Steve Donoghue, England's great jockey, likes football as he saw it in Southern California's recent victory over Tulane. A rugby playe himself, the little jockey who rod to six victories at Epsom Downs had only one difficulty, and tha was finding proper football term to express his emotions. "He ties 'em up that time," Steve would chirp, after a good tackle. "That a knock on," he would lament as ter someone fumbled. He though football more scientific, but rugby faster. The announcement over the public address system that Erny Pinchert had the wind knocked out of him following one play disturbed Donoghue. "We never tell them what happens to a man in 'rugger;' we let 'em guess at it."

The project, fathered by Rene Moreux, important ship-owner and construction specialist, has received the approbation of Louis de Chappedelaine, Premier Laval's Minister of Merchant Marine. MADE NEW INDUSTRY

Nor were there any accidents in his success, for at thirty he deliberately selected Chicago as a favor-Av. ed shipping point and went there 200 from Philadelphia to find a product with a world-wide market. Wrigley selected chewing gum after reject-191 ing soap and baking powder.

Chicle Introduced

The children's knicknack which was chewing gum when Wrigley began its manufacture was made of spruce or paraffin and put up in long packages containing prizes. Under Wrigley's leadership chiele was brought into use as the basic ingredient of the product, the packages were standardized, and machinery was substituted for manual methods.

Within ten years after Wrigley began the manufacture and promotion of chewing gum; what had been a bad habit had become a general custom.

Twenty-five years after he had embarked in the business, the public was paying $30,000,000 a year for his products, and by 1925 his annual sales were between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000. Factories in Chicago, New York, Berlin, London, Toronto and Sydney were manufacturing the four brands upon which he had staked his business success.

Selling his chewing gum on the road during his early Chicago career, Wrigley was twitted about his city of Chicago by a rival salesman who remarked that the town did not even own its own ball clubthe Chicago National League team controlled by Cincinnati interests. Organized Ball Team

The jest struck home, for baseball was Wrigley's hobby, and the whim born then was gratified 25 years later when Wrigley and several associates acquired the club from the Cincinnati men who still owned it. The club was moved to Chicago and styled the Cubs. A few years later he obtained sole control of the club. and added to his baseball holdings the Los Angeles team of the Pacific Coast League.

His third major business venture was the purchase in 1919 of Catalina Island, off the California coast, which he converted not only into a popular summer resort, but into silver, lead and zinc mining properties which pyramided his fortune.
