A Week's Doings at Parliament

By Tom Reid, M.P.

Speeches of Prime Minister and Opposition Leader Draw Packed House—Both Get Much Applause—Some Corrections Are Made

Friday, April 22—On Friday the greater part of the day was taken up with estimates, the House being in committee practically the whole day when the minister of immigration and colonization and the minister of railways gave explanations to the House in regard to the expenditures in connection with their respective departments. A great deal of argument centered around the question of immigration and colonization, the discussion on placing immigrants on the farms coming in for a great deal of attention. It started off by the minister being asked a mild question regarding the matter of placing British boys on farms in this country and it was interesting to note the various opinions expressed on this subject.

In regard to immigration, the minister stated that some 14,000 men had been placed on farms in Old Ontario and, in addition, some 30,000 others were located throughout Canada. On the minister being pressed as to just where these families were placed, he did not seem to have the information at hand for the moment. An innocent remark by the minister that the immigration situation had been left on his doorstep when he assumed office brought half a dozen speakers to their feet at one and the same time, all wanting to remind him that when the present government was in opposition, its members had criticized the then Liberal government for not bringing in more immigrants.

The question of land settlement generally, was debated for some considerable time, quite a few holding forth the view that the way to solve the unemployment problem was to encourage the "back to the land" movement while others maintained that, unless a man had means to keep himself for some time, he would only be a further charge on the government. One speaker pointed out that it seemed strange to him that all the members advocating a "back to the land" movement were not farmers.

At the evening session, the bill introduced by the writer, which would give British Columbia the same freight rates on grain and flour as the eastern provinces, was again before the House for discussion and was opposed by H. G. Barber, member for Fraser Valley. The debate was adjourned by Mr. Fraser of Cariboo so more will be heard of this before being finally disposed of.

The rest of the evening was taken up by the minister of railways when some estimates in connection with canals were passed through. The House adjourned at 10:45.

ments, each party hoping in turn that its chieftain would get the best of the argument.

Galleries Packed

Tuesday, April 26—The galleries were simply packed, not only was every seat taken up but numbers were standing when the House met at 3 o'clock today. All preliminaries having been cleared, Mr. Mackenzie King rose to speak at 3:20 and spoke right through until close to 6 o'clock. He deprecated the attitude of the United Farmer group, who would wipe out the Liberal amendment and substitute their own sub-amendment holding forth that, in the matter of currency and credit, no country today could very well put a new policy into effect alone and, if there was anything that Canada today suffered from, it was due in great measure to the fact that her whole trade had diminished to almost a vanishing point. Regarding the sub-amendment he asked them whether they would be willing to entrust the government of today with the nationalist power of the banks, also, if they would even entrust that to a Liberal government, and the further attitude, if they were in power themselves, whether they would really put this measure into effect. The conditions in the world he advocated were not going to be solved by immediately pouring more paper money into circulation. The Liberal party, he stated, realized that there was something wrong in the monetary system but, no matter how sympathetic, could not accept a sub-amendment which rejected all of the Liberal amendment. Turning to the matter of tariff, he declared the policy of the present government, which had transferred the making of tariffs from Parliament to the Privy Council, was certainly detrimental to the interests of the country. Canada, he pointed out, has today a higher tariff and also a higher number of idle and there was no doubt but that trade and tariffs would be the most important subjects at the coming economic conference, regarding which he was of the opinion that the importance of the event should not be exaggerated. He had a few comments to make regarding the 3% tax on all goods entering Canada. It was his own private opinion that a movement was on foot throughout the British Commonwealth of Nations, and advocated by a group of Tory leaders, to make the British Commonwealth of Nations an economic unit, the results of which, if accomplished, would have far reaching effects on the welfare of Canada, or in other words political power. He believed the revenue from the 3% imposed duty would be placed in a general fund and used for Imperial purposes. It appeared by the applause given to him when he sat down that his speech had given comfort and satisfaction to the members of his party and so we adjourned for what used to be called supper but is now termed dinner, fully prepared for what was to follow in the replies which were to be made by the Prime Minister.

The Premier Speaks

If the galleries were crowded in the earlier part of the day, they were even more so when the House met at 8 p.m. Attendant policemen had quite a time finding places for all who wanted to hear. When the Prime Minister rose to speak he must have been heartened indeed by the great applause given by his supporters. The Prime Minister spoke for nearly two hours and was subjected to quite a few interruptions which drew a rebuke from the Speaker. At the outset, he pointed out that Canada today is in the midst of an unprecedented crisis and we are facing facts and not theories. He went back to 1914 and traced the history of events right through to 1930, and his remarks were very interesting indeed. He told how Canada had been caught in the world's current events, especially since the British departure from the gold standard. He spoke of the tariff as an instrument to accomplish an object and advocated that even a prohibitive tariff could be justified. Regarding the sub-amendment put forth by the Progressive group, he dismissed these proposals as ruinous and destructive alike to the credit of the country. It was a wonderful address all through and would have perhaps been considered quite a masterpiece had it not been for the fact that, towards the end, he endeavored to heap ridicule on the Liberal party by accusing Vincent Massey as being in league with the Labor party and as being the new organizer of the Liberal party, which he claimed was now turning its attention to new social theories. Before closing he referred to the forthcoming imperial conference and told the House of his having gone to London in 1930 with a clear and definite view in his mind. His supporters cheered him to the echo when he finished with the remark that, since then, the electors of Great Britain had finally settled the question. He had invited the conference to come to Ottawa when he hoped that great success would develop out of this matter.

Speaking of interruptions in the House, it grieves one to hear so many of these when speakers are on their feet. There is nothing so disconcerting to a speaker as to have gibes and interruptions thrown at him while in the midst of a discourse. From what I have seen and heard, unless a man interrupts a speaker to ask some question from a point of information alone, he generally gets the worst of it, and this is even more so when it happens to be the Prime Minister who is speaking. It was Robert Burns who said in one of his poems: "The best laid plans of mice and men gang aft a-gley," and this was no more true than on Tuesday night.

It was fully understood that the Prime Minister would be the last speaker of the day but, after the applause which had lasted for fully three minutes had died down, and, just as the speaker rose to put the motion to the House, Mr. Neill, Independent Liberal, rose to his feet to speak, and in spite of a lot of interruptions, continued his discourse. He wanted to correct the statements made by Mr. Plunkett of Victoria who the previous evening had endeavored to belittle the statements made by Mr. Neill and the writer in connection with unemployment matters which took place last fall in British Columbia and in which he had also criticized the present provincial government. This being the last opportunity afforded one to speak, Mr. Neill had taken the advantage, as his name had been mentioned by Mr. Plunkett.

It was 10:45 when Mr. Neill finished, after which the House divided on the amendment to the amendment which was defeated 178 to 17.
