Future For Whaling is Uncertain—Large Anchovy Schools on West Coast Useless

The vagaries of international exchange and world markets will dictate the policy of the west coast whaling industry this year. Prince Rupert voted 19 to 4 against the closing of the branch.

Some observers see in the vote on this issue a reprisal on the part of Seattle and Ketchikan against a move which was mooted last year in Prince Rupert to close the port to American vessels. If such was the case, it simply appears that business sentiment on the part of the American fishermen was stronger than the union principle.
