proved not only a difficult task, replete with thrills and hazards, but one upon which sizeable fortunes have been spent. Especially has this been true in the past five years, when land speed has been advanced at a faster pace than in any other corresponding period in racing history. During that half decade, records show approximately $1,000,000 has been expended that a mere 6.013 seconds could be shaved off the record time for the measured mile. Although a seemingly small reduction in time, those precious six seconds represent the boosting of straightaway speed exactly 71.511 miles an hour with the

During the past five years. remely active in establishing new dollars. Six other drivers, includlate Sir Henry Segrave, also of Britain, spent approximately another half million on their record

Most of Sir Malcolm's early record runs, like those of other British contenders, were made on pendine sands in England. As records were advanced higher and higher, necessitating longer rolling starts, that famous racing strip proved to be too short and drivers cast about for a more suitable site. After Sir Malcolm set a record of 174.224 miles an hour at Pendine on February 4, 1927. Sir Henry, in seeking to recover previously lost laurels, came to Daytona Beach for new trials. And, on March 29 of that year, he startled the world by boosting the record to 203.79 miles an hour. Sir Malcolm came over the following year and on February 19 pushed the record up to 206.956 miles only to lose it two months later to Keech who clipped off 207.552 miles an hour in a 36-cylinder Triplex.

Eager to regain the record, Sir Henry again returned in 1929 and on March 11 sent his Irving-Napier car hurtling over the sands at the unprecedented land speed of 231 .-362 miles an hour. Sir Malcolm then immediately made preparations for recapturing the record and on February 5, 1931, knocked off 245.733 miles an hour in his Napier-Campbell racer here. Unsatisfied with world's automobile speed record has came back in an effort to boost the mark still higher, succeeding last month in setting 253.968 miles. On one untimed practice run last year he claimed he attained a speed
