McGEER'S POSITION

The Vancouver morning paper, the News Herald, on Monday published the following editorial article under the heading "A Sorry Spectacle."

"In a final attempt to discredit the leader under whose banner he had campaigned, G. G. McGeer on Saturday night delivered himself of such a tirade as has seldom been heard by Vancouver electors.

"His time was well chosen—the dying hour of the week, closing his speech as midnight rang out, too late for reply before voters march to the polls to record their verdict today.

"His medium, the radio, was equally well chosen, as it permitted uninterrupted delivery of one of the most remarkable exhibitions of personal spleen ever vented by a public figure.

"Mr. McGeer denied, in his lengthy and vituperative address that his is a case of 'sour grapes,' denied that his desertion of his leader and his party, and his repudiation of the Burrard Liberal Association, which nominated him, is attributable to his intense disappointment because McGeer Sloan, and not he, was selected for the post of attorney-general.

"His denials, however, will hardly carry weight, and all thoughtful citizens who heard Saturday night's address will give him and his motives their true valuation.

"Unfortunately for Mr. McGeer's case, his much too-long speech included inconsistencies in itself and contained also statements inconsistent with his pre-election utterances.

"He quoted, for instance, the alleged boast of the liquor baron, who was reported to have said he had 'owned' two former governments, and he then added that this same brewer would now be able to boast that he owned a third. Yet, in another place in his address, he observed that he would have been prepared to support A. M. Manson, K.C., as attorney-general, a gentleman who, since he was attorney-general for a number of years in one of the 'owned' governments, must, if the allegations are true, have participated in the guilt of the 'owned' ones.

"And then again, how does Mr. McGeer reconcile his present fears of a government dominated by liquor interests with the stout assertion which he made during his election campaign, that the charges made by the C. C. F. of liquor money in the Liberal party chest were merely a red herring? He may have learned much to change his mind in the short period that has intervened, but, unfortunately for Mr. McGeer, a great many people are going to have their doubts.

"Such things as these would make the whole episode rather funny, were it not for the fact that the spectacle of a man turning upon the leader to whom his entire loyalty and support are due, merely because of personal pique, is extremely nauseating. Mr. McGeer will find that it will seriously deprecate the esteem in which he was formerly held by a large section of the public."

to other channels, such as his vice-chancellorship and principalship of McGill University, but here he merely continued to exercise the genius as an organizer he had demonstrated so effectively in the sphere of arms.

Early Military Pendant

Napoleon's saying that every soldier carries the baton of a field-marshal in his knapsack is aptly supported by the career of Sir Arthur Currie. He early displayed a penchant for military matters and in 1897 at the age of 22, he began his militia service as a gunner in the Fifth Regiment, Canadian Garrison Artillery, at Victoria. His promotion was steady and three years later saw him presented with the Queen's Commission. As an officer he threw himself vigorously into the affairs of the service and he climbed the ladder progressively until he was rewarded in 1910 by being given command of the regiment. After 15 years with the "Gunners" Currie withdrew from that arm and transferred his activities to the infantry. In 1913 he assisted in organizing the Fifteenth Regiment of Foot, the Gordon Highlanders of Canada.

The outbreak of war found him placing his wide knowledge of military matters at the disposal of his country. He volunteered for active service and his worth was immediately recognized by the government appointing him to the command of the Second Brigade of Infantry. It was with this unit he proceeded to England in September, 1914, and February, 1915, saw him in France.

The Second Battle of Ypres, in April, 1915, was the baptism of fire of the First Canadian Brigade. Few engagements of the war stand out in greater relief, for it was here the Germans first introduced gas into warfare. It is common knowledge how the regiments of French Colonials broke before this new and awful agency of destruction and how the Canadians, flanking the Allies, stood in the breach to bear the brunt of the German assault. Currie and his men performed magnificent service, the Second Brigade in particular being singled out for unstinted praise for its endurance and its hardihood.

He continued with the Second Brigade through the engagements of Festubert (May, 1915) and Givenchy (June, 1915), and on the relinquishment by General Alderson of command of the First Canadian Division in September, 1915, Currie was appointed successor with the rank of Major-General.

In July, 1916, with the organization of the Third Canadian Division and the grouping of the Canadians into a complete army corps a commander had been found in the person of that brilliant officer, General Sir Julian Byng, who as Baron Byng of Vimy eventually became Governor-General of the Dominion. Byng held this post until June, 1917, when he was advanced to the command of the Third (British) Army. Prior to his departure he urged the next commander of the Canadian Corps be a native-born Canadian and he indicated his logical successor should be Major-General Arthur W. Currie. The recommendation was promptly acted upon and on June 8, 1917, Currie was appointed to the supreme command. Nine days later, in Albert, France, he received the accolade from His Majesty and was created Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The victorious part of the Canadian Corps in the closing months of the war is indissolubly bound up with the activities of Sir Arthur Currie. He was not unprepared for the tremendous drain which the fighting of that year would be certain to impose upon his forces and he realized success or failure depended entirely upon maintaining his units at full fighting strength. He labored hard training reinforcements and infusing through all ranks the theory and spirit of the offensive.

It was fitting that since the Dominion troops had contributed so much toward the undoing of the enemy they should be selected for the honor of advancing into Germany. Two divisions were chosen, the First and Second and on November 16, 1918, began the long march from Mons to Cologne. One month later saw Sir Arthur Currie at his headquarters in the city of Bonn with his troops in garrison on the hills east of the Rhine.

Sir Arthur and the Canadian Corps had brought a glorious chapter to a successful conclusion.

Return to Canada

The return of Sir Arthur Currie to Canada and the demobilization of the Canadian Corps brought the army of the Dominion back to its peace-time footing. His activities were transferred from the sphere of arms and armies to that of learning, for McGill University of Montreal, quick to estimate the great advantage to that institution of having at its head a man of Currie's calibre, offered him the position of Principal and vice-chancellor in succession to Sir Auckland Geddes, subsequently British Ambassador to Washington.

In his office as Principal of McGill, Sir Arthur Currie brought his fresh and vigorous mind to play on the problems attendant upon administering a great modern university, and his success is attested by the place of honor that McGill continues to hold among the academic institutions of the world. His 13 years at McGill was a period of progress for that institution. One new building after another sprang up around the campus, new departments being formed and old ones strengthened.

Sir Arthur was president of the conference of Canadian Universities from 1925 to 1927. The following commissions in which he held office showed the widespread nature of his interests: Montreal General Hospital, life governor; Bank of Montreal, director; United Services Club, honorary president; Anti-Tuberculosis and General Health League, chairman; Montreal Rehabilitation Committee, chairman.

Although claimed as a westerner, Arthur William Currie was Ontario-born. He was born at Napperton, Middlesex, Dec. 5, 1875. He was educated in the public schools and was first attracted to the profession of teaching. At the age of 19 he heard the call of the west and left in 1894 for British Columbia where he continued teaching at Sydney and Victoria, where in 1899 he transferred himself to the commercial world. In 1901 he married Lucy Sophia Chaworth Musters of Nottingham, England. There were a son, Garner Arnsby, and a daughter, Mrs. A. T. Galt Durford. Currie engaged for 15 years in the sale of insurance and real estate on the coast. But his heart's interest lay in military affairs and 1914 gave him his chance to prove himself a great soldier and a great leader. He received high honors for his military service from the British and all Allied governments.
