WATERFRONT

Low Price of Fish is Subject of Long. Wail on the Waterfront and Up-Town But Hope is Expressed That Things Will be Better Soon

The chief subject of discussion on the waterfront today as lost with all her crew. is the price of fish. Everywhere you go you hear wails from the fishermen and the supply houses and the merchants up-town join in the long big moan. Many fishermen's families have had to remain on relief because their pounds; Gloucester, 162,000 pounds; men were not earning anything. In spite of this there is a Portland, 108,500 pounds. some cases," said one of the halibut buyers yesterday when discussing the local situation. He stated that would help make matters worse. Without banking facilities it was difficult doing business.

While prices are so low that few Canadian fishermen have broken even within the past two weeks there is a tendency to move out to the banks again after a few days in port. The fishermen are perennially hopeful that they may be the lucky ones in ten days or two weeks' time when they come back with their catches. They think prices cannot always be as bad as they are today and they would hate to be without fish if prices suddenly moved up.

There's a report around Seal Cove that things look hopeful for the new pulp mill. The mayor of that burgh is said to be preparing for a big celebration as soon as something definite is announced but he thinks he'll wait a few weeks for fear something happens in the meantime.

Reports received from Ketchikan are that King salmon trollers are stirring from their winter quarters. No salmon arrived there for two months following the Christmas holidays.

The gas boat Pacific brought to Ketchikan the two survivors of the boat sank. A heavy sea and storm opened up the seams of the boat

Heavy weather has kept the fishing fleet back quite a bit in the last few weeks. And the storms have not been small. The "Reliance," one of the most popular halibut boats in this harbor which was caught in a storm, is now practically given up

What Does the World Need?

(By Capt. K. A. Loewen, Salvation Army.)

The most prominent topic today, whether in conversation or reading, is the condition of things in the world. Not only in our town, country or even nation, but all the world speaks and writes of its distress. Nations disagree and there are rumors of war, not only rumors, but actual battles are being fought in some parts of this troubled

To go back to the Israelites, we find Ezekiel's prophecies of the troubles that were to come to them on account of their sins, and repeatedly the words appear: "And they shall know that I am the Lord."

Many times in the Bible we read of how the people would forget God, and turn to other gods, then the Lord in His mercy would let trouble come to them, until they would awaken to their need of the true and living God.
