FIRST TRIP

Wave Went Down While in Tow of Government Craft

Herman Rensvold, a young halibut fisherman, lost his newly purchased craft the Wave, a small 25foot boat yesterday. He was out fishing on his first trip and had quite a nice little catch aboard when he found that his boat was leaking. He haled a government boat which was hovering around Jap Point to give him a tow into town which it readily did. While towing the government craft stopped for a few minutes to make readjustments and the Wave filling rapidly, immediately sank. Herman who was aboard grabbed a buoy and managed to keep himself afloat until the other boat turned around to pick him up. The Wave sank in about 40 fathoms of water so it will be a total loss.
