Capt. Ian Mackenzie Inspires Big Meeting With Reform Doctrines

Prime Minister of British Columbia," declared Capt. Mackenzie amid applause.

He would speak, said Capt. Mackenzie, on recent political developments in British Columbia, national and international matters affecting the province, possible means of correcting the present situation, the policies of the different parties and, finally the solutions the Liberal party had to offer.

The speaker defended the system of party government which had provided stability in public affairs of British Columbia during the McBride regime from 1903 to 1916 and under the Liberals from 1916 to 1928. He charged ministers and followers of Premier Tolmie, who as late as February of this year had voted confidence in the government, with betraying their leader. They would emerge from the fight with less dignity and less honor than the old man who was trying so tragically to carry on. The speaker pointed to the great program of social and humanitarian legislation for which the Liberal administration had been responsible and which had been unsurpassed in any other part of the Dominion or the world.

Discussing public finances, Capt. Mackenzie declared that it was not the intention of the Liberals to default but rather, in co-operation with the federal government, to recast the entire debt structure which it must be admitted could not be met. He advocated an internal conversion loan to refinance the entire debt. This had been done successfully in Australia and could be done in Canada and it must be done in this province. The interest on the public debt must be reduced and the Liberal party would work along this line.

Speaking of unemployment, he referred to conditions in relief camps in Canada as being a disgrace to the country. Declaring that unemployment was essentially a federal problem, the speaker condemned the principle of the dole. He elaborated upon the Liberal plan of "work and wages." It was a pledge that the Liberal party must implement if it was not to be also destroyed. The integrity of the nation and the self-respect of its people must be maintained (applause). Work and not charity was what was wanted. It was what the Liberal party promised and intended to give.

Banking and Finance

Speaking of banking, Capt. Mackenzie declared that note issue, currency and credit must be divorced from the control of the banks and used for the good of Canada's people. He advocated a central bank but it should be a "people's bank" and not a "banker's bank."

Dealing with political matters, Capt. Mackenzie pointed out that Mr. Pattullo was the only leader who had a mandate from his party for free, untrammelled action. The Liberal party was the only group which would send its members to the House with a mandate for independent action. He referred to the plank in the Liberal platform that defeat of a government measure did not necessarily involve defeat of the administration which could only be turned out of office by a straight non-confidence vote.

Turning his attention to the C. C. F., Capt. Mackenzie described the movement as a "natural protest against poverty and despair." So had the Liberal party been originally conceived. The speaker sympathized with the idealism behind the C. C. F. movement but most emphatically condemned the glaring impossibility and impracticability of the new party's program. He referred to some of the inconsistencies of the national leader, Mr. Woodsworth. In reality, its intent was straight socialism. If constitutional methods failed, it thought that it was entitled to resort to methods of force. Eighty percent of the C. C. F. platform was absolutely innocuous. Practically everything of value or constructiveness in the C. C. F. platform had been advocated and worked for by the Liberal party for years.

Capt. Mackenzie condemned the "Soviet committee of control" in Vancouver which reserved the privilege to interfere with the rights of the constituencies and the activities of the elected C. C. F. members. In objecton to this plan Mr. Neelands of South Vancouver had withdrawn as the C. C. F. candidate. There had been similar withdrawals in other ridings such as Rossland-Trail.

"I would suggest," said the speaker in closing, "that the C. C. F. candidates should recant from a platform which contains such iniquities and join the Liberals in their program of progress and reform."

Aubrey Peck

Aubrey C. Peck of Vancouver, who made a pleasing impression, complimented the Liberal party and Mr. Pattullo for having espoused the cause of the young men and women and their problems. Young people were rallying to the support of the Liberal party because it had a dynamic plan of action and was building for tomorrow. It intended to give "work and wages" to those who required it and this was a matter of paramount importance to the young people.

Mr. Peck advocated a reorganization of the educational system. The Liberal party was pledged to a policy of cutting down education costs for the people instead of increasing them and to extend rather than to decrease educational facilities.

The Liberal party was also pledged to a plan of unemployment insurance, a system of insurance under which protection would be provided in good times against bad. The depression should be capitalized to insure that such a plan was brought about. If it was left to the good times, then it would be forgotten again.

Mr. Peck believed that the Liberal "back to the land" plank with its free land proviso was practical and forward looking. He was convinced that there was a good living on the land for those who were willing to avail themselves of the opportunity.

"Conservatism is for the old," declared the speaker in closing. "Socialism is for the theorists and agitators. Liberalism is the home of forward looking youth and reformers of all ages." (applause).

Is Only Hope

Olof Hanson M.P. saw in the return of the Liberal party the only hope for Canada and British Columbia in the present chaos. The party had a definite and constructive policy and it had a strong leader who could say "yes" and who could say "no" and mean it.

Col. McMordie, in opening the meeting, dealt briefly with the unique political situation in which 219 candidates were offerng for 47 seats. The position in which Premier Tolmie found himself today he described as one of the greatest political tragedies. There was only the one party which had the leadership and the policy to fix up the present mess of public affairs and that was the Liberal.
