Mining Engineer Sees Probable Increase in District Activity With Silver Lead Coming Back

Tells of Mining Operations at Different Points in Address To Rotary Club at Luncheon Yesterday

"If the showings in the country east of here were only in the Bridge River country just now they would be taken up at once," declared Harold L. Batten, consulting mining engineer, who addressed the Rotary Club yesterday following a visit to the Columario mine at Usk, the opening up of which is continuing. At present very little work is being done in the interior district, the only other activity of importance being in the neighborhood of Smithers. Mr. Batten predicted, however, that the activity would next season spread to this district including Stewart where there was every prospect of an active season.

The properties on which work has to be done must figure on twenty dollar gold and not thirty, the present price, as there is a possibility of the price dropping back to the old figure.

Silver lead will be the first properties to come back, according to Mr. Batten. This is because of the fact that there is little lead in stock.

The speaker then told about some of the southern mines. In Vancouver recently he had seen 30 cars of ore from the Monarch mine being shipped from Vancouver to Belgium. The Monarch is located at Field and a car of lead ore and a car of zinc concentrates are shipped from there daily. The mine was developed by A. B. Trites and at present is one of the largest lead mines in the world. The concentrates are theoretically pure.

The high price of gold, Mr. Batten said, was due to the low price of the dollar. The fact that gold had appreciated in value one third since the depression ended in the spring meant that the dollar had depreciated in value to that extent. The increase in value of gold (Continued on page six.)

Nearly Perished When Steamer Princess Ena Went Ashore On Queen Charlotte Islands

VANCOUVER, October 13 (Canadian Press)—Five men cheated death in a grim struggle with wind and waves when the steamer Princess Ena struck a rock off Copper Island, one of the Queen Charlotte group, it was learned here yesterday.

Advices told how the steamer, in town of a tug enroute to Jedway, went aground late Monday night. Listing heavily, boats could not be launched from the vessel and the five men on board plunged into the angry sea and swam 200 yards to safety aboard the tug Sea Wave.

The ship struck at high tide and is reported to be badly holed. Arrangements for salvage are under way.

Anna May Ullman, Who Lost Her Feet as Result of Frostbite, Takes Up Hazelton Residence

Is Writing Book on Her Adventures of Last Winter Which Almost Ended in Death—Letter to Daily News

Miss Anna May Ullman, courageous young American woman, who was caught in a blizzard on a hiking tour between Telegraph Creek and Atlin last winter and sustained frostbite which necessitated amputation of both her feet, has arrived at Hazelton after spending months in hospital at Vancouver and plans on residing at the interior town. With the assistance of a former school teacher, Miss Ullman is engaged in the writing of a book on the adventures of her trip. In an interesting letter to the editor of the Daily News, she writes as follows descriptive of her tramp which almost ended so tragically last winter:

"High above the timber line big herds of caribou pawed the snow off white moss so they could eat it. They were undaunted by storms and bitter cold of the blizzards on their feeding grounds on top of the mountains.

"Giant bull moose fled when they got wind of us as we approached. It was winter but they hadn't yet lost their huge horns.

"Far across frozen lakes came the high-pitched barking of coyotes during the long winter nights.

"A trapper showed me a big wolf, frozen solid, after he had been skinned. Even with its joints bent, the animal came up to my waist.

Real Cold Here
"When you get on top of the mountains (Telegraph Creek) in winter, it's so cold that your finger sticks to the trigger of your gun when you try to shoot. Sometimes the gun freezes so it won't work.

"At 25 degrees below, you can hear the trees popping. The Indians say that is Jack Frost shooting his arrows at the trees and the pop is when they strike.

"The Indians tell of fights among the wolves where they tear each other up and fight until some of them are killed and torn to pieces. At times the wolves will even attack coyotes.

"Trappers say that wolves will try to lure dogs away from camp, then kill the dogs.

Haunted Villages
"From the older Indians come weird tales of haunted villages where savage battles were fought long before the pale-face came. They tell of war-whoops and the beating of drums at night as the ghosts of the dead in their raw-hide armor fight again after the sun goes down.

"The trappers say that whoever made up the saying 'the sly old fox' hadn't met the coyote. He is one of the most wary of fur animals.

"The wolverine is probably the most cunning of small fur animals. He knows how to spring traps and get the bait without getting caught himself. He will come along and chew up any fur animals he finds in the traps. If he gets into a trapper's cabin, he tears up all the flour sacks and destroys everything in sight.

"They say that bears will pick up a large jam tin and squish it in two with their big paws, then lick out the jam.

"Sometimes the toughest of the old grizzlies are still roaming the hills after the snow flies. But the first real cold spell—about 25 degrees below zero—drives them to their dens.

Other Woman Hikers
"Miss Thea Francis, the 39-year-old New York woman, who walked most of the way from New York to Alaska last summer, was planning on walking back to New York the last I heard of her. With the exception of a long ride on horse back along the Telegraph Trail across the Stikine River in a motor-boat and by steamer from Skagway to Juneau, she walked.

"I haven't heard anything lately about the little woman, believed to be Russian, who went up the Telegraph Trail about three or four years ago. She walked as far as
