Police and Milk Strikers Clash

Guerrilla warfare is being waged in New York state between milk strikers on the one hand, and police and state troopers on the other. The strikers are trying to prevent the shipment of milk to the cities. Above are two scenes from a recent battle, in which, at top, a burly trooper seems to have his dander up and is ready to knock someone's block off. Someone apparently just tried to do the same to him. Below, two policemen retire for repairs from the front treaches. Many have been seriously hurt in the clashes which are continuing without signs of abatement, both factions being determined to gain their point.
