a half years for a local syndicate, mediate danger. on August 16 for Prince Rupert and The Standard Service, although before arriving here last week. High proceeded under her own power They had to travel well over 2000 fuel for various Alaska ports. miles by practically all descriptions of transportation.

From the field in which they back to Vancouver. were prospecting they came down the South Nahanni River and the Liard to Fort Simpson, these little traversed streams being, of course, the most difficult part of the trip which was not without considerable hazard. From Fort Simpson they travelled up the Mackenzie River via Great Slave Lake, Slave River Fort Chipewyan, Athabasca Lake and River to Waterways and Fort McMurray. From there it was railway transportation south to Edmonton and thence home.

Rollog and Seguin had many an interesting story to tell of their experiences while in that far north country. A whole nine months lapsed during which they saw not a single other human besides themselves. Last winter the thermometer descended to fifty-five below! and they could not tell how much colder it became for the mercury then froze.
