THE SCAVENGING MONOPOLY

Tonight the city council will meet in session. One of the items of the business will be the final disposition of Alderman Hilditch's by-law to create a scavenging monopoly. The by-law has passed three readings, and will come up for ratification—or rejection.

The old method of collecting and disposing of garbage by licensed scavenging firms was not a satisfactory one. No one is anxious to have it continued. It was a crude and costly way, and only utilised in emergency until the city could formulate a better plan. Nothing herein said is to be construed as an argument for reviving the old system of collection by private scavenging firms. As a system, it was almost as obnoxious as the creation of the scavenging monopoly, for while theoretically in competition with each other, scavengers, like competing railroads, soon learn the value of making a gentleman's agreement to maintain rates and get all they can out of the public.

The creation of the scavenging monopoly under a private contractor, is all the more suspicious, because the council do not believe in the private contract system. Alderman Hilditch himself, led the council's cry for a public works department.

Yet on the question of city scavenging—a work which owing to its relation to public health and comfort should have all others be looked after by the city—Alderman Hilditch has fathered the by-law to create a scavenging monopoly under a private contractor.

What is the reason? —?

If it is possible for a private citizen to undertake the collection of garbage for a sum which pays for the cost of the service rendered and leaves him a surplus as profits, why should not the city undertake the work and save that surplus-profit for the citizens. Any other plan makes the city a party to a scheme whereby the citizens will have to pay for the actual cost of the work, plus an extra sum for rake off or profits.

It is true that the council have offered an explanation for their action that they were obliged to give the work to a private contractor as they could not buy horses, only teams. But this is quite too thin for acceptance. A council which feels it is capable of undertaking a $500,000 hydro-electric scheme, knows enough to buy a team and divide it, even if it were really impossible for anyone to buy single horses.

Already complaints are coming in from citizens of alleged high-handed treatment from the scavengers. Several people in small shacks have been told that the charge will be 50 cents a visit. The schedule states that the total cost of garbage and night soil collection is to be 50 cents per month.

Does this mean that the contractors will only call once a month at shacks and cabins?

If so, the council had better vote $50,000 for a new typhoid wing to the Hospital, in readiness for the inevitable.

The News does not expect that the proposed by-law will be rejected. It is all too much of a kind with the extra hour to the hotels, the reduction of theatre license, the reduction of bar-tenders' licenses, the creation of bottle licenses, the payment of the disputed printing account, the patronage system, and the other distinctive works of the Manson administration. There are not enough public-spirited men on the council to defeat it. It will pass through all right.

But before the council pass the scavenging monopoly by-law, we invite them to take up the clause which states how often the scavenging is to be done. At present the clause reads "as often as is necessary." That means nothing. That may mean once a year, or once a month, or once a week. It will more likely mean once a month than once a week.

If a pig ranch is to be run in connection with the monopoly, it may mean "as often as is necessary to procure swill for the pigs."

There is another question that should be settled before the city is bound over to the garbage monopoly. That refers to the right of citizens to destroy their own garbage, if the monopoly fails to give proper service.

If trouble ensues, or a once-a-month service is inaugurated, can a citizen be fined or a private carter be fined if they undertake to protect the public health by destroying their own garbage?

Or if a public spirited citizen, prefers to build an incinerator at the back of his lot and destroy his own garbage rather than contribute to the coffers of the garbage monopoly, is he to be made the subject of a police prosecution?

A REMINISCENCE OF SHERLOCK HOLMES

THE ADVENTURE OF THE DEVIL'S FOOT

BY ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

Copyright, 1911, by the Century Syndicate

"You will remember, Watson," he remarked one afternoon, "that there is a single common point of resemblance in the varying reports which have reached us. This concerns the effect of the atmosphere of the room in each case upon those who have first entered it. You will recollect that Mortimer Tregennis, in describing the episode of his last visit to his brothers' house, remarked that the doctor on entering the room fell into a chair? You had forgotten? Well, I can answer for it that it was so. Now, you will remember also that Mrs. Porter, the housekeeper, told us that she herself fainted upon entering the room and had afterwards opened the window. In the second case—that of Mortimer Tregennis himself—you cannot have forgotten the horrible stuffiness of the room when we arrived, though the servant had thrown open the window. That servant, I found upon inquiry, was so ill that she had gone to her bed. You will admit, Watson, that these facts are very suggestive. In each case there is evidence of a poisonous atmosphere. In each case, also, there is combustion going on in the room—in the one case a fire, in the other a lamp. The fire was needed, but the lamp was lit—as a comparison of the oil consumed will show—long after it was broad daylight. Why? Surely because there is some connection between three things—the burning, the stuffy atmosphere, and, finally, the madness or death of those unfortunate people. That is clear, is it not?"

"It would appear so."

At least we may accept it as a working hypothesis. We will suppose, then, that something was burned in each case which produced an atmosphere causing strange toxic effects. Very good. In the first instance—that of the Tregennis family—this substance was placed in the fire. Now, the window was shut, but the fire would naturally carry fumes to some extent up the chimney. Hence one would expect that the effects of the poison to be less in the second case, where there was less escape for the vapour. The result seems to indicate that it was so, since in the first case only the woman, who had presumably the more sensitive organism, was killed, the others exhibiting that temporary or permanent lunacy which is evidently the first effect of the drug. In the second case the result was complete. The facts, therefore, seem to bear out the theory of a poison which worked by combustion.

"With this train of reasoning in my head I naturally looked about in Mortimer Tregennis's room to find some remains of this substance. The obvious place to look was the talc shield or smoke guard of the lamp. There, sure enough I perceived a number of flaky ashes, and round the edges a fringe of brownish powder, which had not yet been consumed. Half of this I took, as you saw, and I placed it in an envelope."

"Why half, Holmes?"

"It is not for me, my dear Watson, to stand in the way of the official police force. I leave them all the evidence which I found. The poison still remained upon the talc, had they the wit to find it. Now, Watson, we will light our lamp; we will, however, take the precaution to open our window to avoid the premature decease of two deserving members of society, and you will seat yourself near that open window in an arm-chair—unless, like a sensible man, you determine to have nothing to do with the affair. Oh, you will see it out, will you? I thought I knew my Watson. This chair I will place opposite yours, so that we may be the same distance from the poison, and face to face. The door we will leave ajar. Each is now in a position to watch the other and to bring the experiment to an end should the symptoms seem alarming. Is that all clear? Well, then, I take our powder—or what remains of it—from the envelope, and I lay it above the burning lamp. So? No, Watson, let us sit down and await developments."

They were not long in coming. I had hardly settled in my chair before I was conscious of a thick, musky odour, subtle and nauseous. At the very first whiff of it my brain and my imagination were beyond all control. A thick, black cloud swirled before my eyes, and my mind told me that in this cloud, unseen as yet, but about to spring out upon my appalled senses, lurked all that was vaguely horrible, all that was monstrous and inconceivably wicked in the universe. Vague shapes swirled and swam amid the dark cloud-bank, each a menace and a warning of something coming, the advent of some unspeakable dweller upon the threshold, whose very shadow would blast my soul. A freezing horror took possession of me. I felt that my hair was rising, that my eyes were protruding, that my mouth was opened, and my tongue like leather. The turmoil within my brain was such that something must surely snap. I tried to scream, and was vaguely aware of some hoarse croak which was my own voice, but distant and detached from myself. At the same moment, in some effort of escape, I broke through that cloud of despair, and had a glimpse of Holmes's face, white, rigid, and drawn with horror—the very look which I had seen upon the features of the dead. It was that vision which gave me an instant of sanity and of strength. I dashed from my chair, threw my arms round Holmes, and together we lurched through the door, and an instant afterwards had thrown ourselves down upon the grassplot and were lying side by side, conscious only of the glorious sunshine which was bursting its way through the hellish cloud of terror which had girt us in. Slowly it rose from our souls like the mists from a landscape, until peace and reason had returned, and we were sitting up on the grass, wiping our clammy foreheads, and looking with apprehension at each other to mark the last traces of that terrific experience which we had undergone.

"Upon my word, Watson!" said Holmes at last with an unsteady voice, "I owe you both my thanks and an apology. It was an unjustifiable experiment even for oneself, and doubly so for a friend. I am really very sorry."

"You know," I answered, with some emotion, for I had never seen so much of Holmes's heart before, "that it is my greatest joy and privilege to help you."

He relapsed at once into the half-humorous, half-cynical vein which was his habitual attitude to those about him. "It would be superfluous to drive us mad, my dear Watson," said he. "A candid observer would certainly declare that we were so already before we embarked upon so wild an experiment. I confess that I never imagined that the effect could be so sudden and so severe." He dashed into the cottage, and, reappearing with the burning lamp held at full arm's length, he threw it among a bank of brambles. "We must give the room a little time to clear. I take it Watson, that you have no longer a shadow of a doubt as to how these tragedies were produced?"

"None whatever."

"But the cause remains as obscure as before. Come into the arbour here, and let us discuss it together. That villainous stuff seems to still linger round my throat. I think we must admit that all the evidence points to this man, Mortimer Tregennis, having been the criminal in the first tragedy, though he was the victim in the second one. We must remember, in the first place, that there is some story of a family quarrel, followed by a reconciliation. How bitter that quarrel may have been, or how hollow the reconciliation, we cannot tell. When I think of Mortimer Tregennis, with the foxy face and the small shrewd, beady eyes behind the spectacles, he is not a man whom I should judge to be of a particularly forgiving disposition. Well, in the next place you will remember that this idea of someone moving in the garden, which took our attention for a moment from the real cause of the tragedy, emanated from him. He had a motive in mis-leading us. Finally, if he hid not throw this substance into the fire at the moment of leaving the room, who did so? The affair happened immediately after his departure. Had anyone else come in, the family would certainly have risen from the table. Besides, in peaceful Cornwall, visitors do not arrive after ten o'clock at night. We may take it, then, that all the evidence points to Mortimer Tregennis as the culprit."

"Then his own death was suicide!"

UNCLE JERRY ATTRACTS NOTICE

Vancouver "World" Reporter Spies Him Motoring in Vancouver.

A cloud of dust chased behind a big six-cylinder auto car. A genial-faced man in a specially made Stetson hat leaned back on the cushions beside his wife and hinted to the chauffeur that none of the occupants of the car would be frightened if the throttle was thrown wide open.

In a word "Uncle Jerry" had come to town from Prince Rupert, and was enjoying his first auto ride in several months in this several thousand dollar car, which he had been laying up in a local garage since he went north last summer.

Mr. Jeremiah H. Kugler is, so the human compendiums from the Skeena River country maintain, the liveliest wire up there. He is a real estate agent, and is here to see 30 put at the bottom of some fair sized sales of fruit lands and Rupert real estate.

Before going to Prince Rupert Mr. Kugler was a banker back in that financial hive known as Wall street. The advantages of the fruit lands he owns along the Skeena River have been advertised in every leading paper published in Canada and the country to the south.

As to the future of Prince Rupert and the surrounding country, Uncle Jerry says that the best testimony that he can offer is the fact that he is in business there and is going back next week to stay.—Vancouver World.

DR. KERGIN IS BACK

Had Delightful Trip in Sunbeam

This morning Dr. Kergin returned from an exceedingly pleasant holiday trip in the launch "Sunbeam." He travelled on the out journey with Mr. G. R. Naden and an impression existed that he was to be away for several weeks. It was only a week's holiday jaunt, however, and all who have enquired where the doctor would be back are informed that he is now in town.
