EXTENDING REDEMPTION PERIOD

Undoubtedly, the action of the provincial government in extending for another year the period in which tax sale lots in Prince Rupert may be redeemed before deeds become available to those bidding in such property will be welcomed by many property owners who may have been unfortunate enough to be unable to pay up taxes, especially those who were in danger of losing their homes and there are understood to have been some of these.

It is improbable that, in view of the extension, any home owners who are able to pay their taxes would be so shortsighted as to neglect to do so. There would seem to be no advantage in that course as it would only result in eventually making the burden that much heavier.

Meantime, some who may need it badly will be accorded relief.

By the time another year passes, indications are that times may be so improved that it will not be so difficult as it has been during the past few years for the municipal taxpayer to carry on.

KIDNAPPING RACKET IN CANADA

The kidnapping racket, if one is to believe what one hears, is showing signs of developing to rather ambitious proportions in Canada. We had believed that the field for this game in the Dominion was not so fruitful as in the United States and that the administration of justice to criminals here was of such efficacy that few were daring enough to take the risks of detection and punishment. True there is not a great deal to be alarmed about as yet. In the Labatt case, it appears that the authorities are close on the trail and that the perpetrators of the abduction and abortive ransom attempt may soon be run down. As for Premier Bennett, nothing, of course, really did happen and the "confession" reported to have been made bears some earmarks of hoax.

There is no reason yet to believe that kidnappers in this country are not due for short shrift-even if the "snatchers" do steal across from the United States to attempt to carry out their nefarious undertakings.
