Business Means $330,000 a Year and This Port is Already A Serious Rival—Tacoma is Now Being Made Base For Shipments Northward

SEATTLE, July 7: (CP)—Seattle port authorities fear that the diversion of Seattle's Alaska ships to Tacoma on account of the longshore strike here may mean the transfer of the fish business to Prince Rupert. The business brings yearly returns to Seattle of $330,000. It is pointed out that the fish business is largely export and handled out of the North Atlantic, being moved across the continent by rail.
