Squaw Creek Attracting Prospectors, Forty Having Been Here Yesterday

Quite a movement of prospectors is developing early this spring into the Squaw Creek area of northwestern British Columbia close to the Yukon boundary, no less than forty men having been here yesterday afternoon aboard the Princess Norah bound for the diggings there. There promises to be much activity this season in that district which has been considerably in the limelight during the past two or three years owing to rather rich gold strikes that have been made.
