REMEDY STILL NEEDED

Yesterday Colonel J. W. Nicholls gave an interesting address on the economic situation before the Rotary Club in which he was critical of the recently proposed big public works scheme. He admitted that, while men and women were ill-fed and without proper clothes and at the same time the granaries were filled to overflowing and clothing material was being destroyed, there was something wrong. Unemployment was the problem with which the statesmen of the country had to deal. Unfortunately he made no proposal as to how to deal with the difficulty. Instead of that he assumed the more easy role of critic.

Only a few suggestions have been made as to how to deal with the unemployment problem and these have come mostly from the workers themselves. One group advocates that the workers shall take over all industries and wealth by force. Another group plans to do the same "by constitutional means." Labor unions have made an attempt to meet the situation by reducing the hours and days of labor in some trades. With a few notable exceptions the statesmen of the country have been silent and so have the larger employers. Premier Pattullo proposed to put the unemployed to work by using the national credit and, more recently, Hon. H. H. Stevens has made a proposal for spending a huge sum to put men to work on construction. No other outstanding proposals have been made.

We suggest that what is needed today is less criticism but more constructive proposals. There seems to be a tendency to let things go on in the hope that they will right themselves. While we expect conditions to improve as a result of the present upward swing, we have no hope that they will take up the slack permanently. The improvement will be for a few years only and then we shall have another period when the unemployed will be much more outspoken than they have been during the depression from which we are now emerging. They will demand that they be given work and wages and they will receive the backing of many thousands of those who realize the injustice under which they are suffering.

We are living in the Twentieth Century and we must realize that conditions under which men and women existed in the Nineteenth Century will not be accepted today.
