Head of Royal Bank of Canada Refuses to Disclose Income-Would Reduce Number

Of Banks

MONTREAL, May 25:--Sir Herbert Holt, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, told a subcommittee of the banking and currency committee of the House of Commons that twenty-eight companies of which he was an officer or director owed the Royal Bank of Canada $2,290,255. Only six of the twenty-eight companies were borrowers, the others having on deposit $28,000,000.

Sir Herbert refused to disclose his income from companies with which he is associated on the grounds that no other witness had been asked that question and also that it was "bad principle."

Sir Herbert recommended a reduction in the number of Canadian banks from ten to three and urged a quota upon newsprint in Canada.
