Mount Oldfield Trail Completed To Ski Grounds and Will Prove Boon When Winter Arrives Here

Building of the four-foot trail up Mount Oldfield to the ski cabins has been completed by the provincial public works department but considerable more work in the way of surfacing will have to be done before it can be recommended for general use. When the cold weather of winter comes, however, it will be in better shape and will prove a boon for those climbing the mountain to enjoy the sport of skiing. It is to be supposed that further improvement will be made next season. The trail is a little less than two miles in length and has an easy gradient.

Weather conditions have been hampering work of continuation of the Skeena River highway in the direction of Cloyah Bay although a full crew of fifty men is still at work there. By next midsummer it is expected it will be possible to drive to Cloyah Bay.
