Daring Riders of B. C. Police

The "human arch", one of the many daring feats that are performed by the crack A. Division of the B.C. Provincial Police mounted corps, which has become known as the "Esquestrian Circus." Probably their most daring stunt is the "human arch." Six of the officers form the arch." Two tables are placed about five feet apart. One officer's body spans the intervening space. Two other officers stand on each table. Another bridges the top gap by suspending his body from the shoulders of two of his colleagues standing on the table. Two other policemen brace the arch. Then a group of mounted officers jump over the "human fence" and under the "human arch." Only inches separate the horses' bodies and hoofs from the men as they make the jump. Since this stunt has been developed there has been only one accident during the many demonstrations they have given.
