WARSHIP REFLOATS

H. M. S. Nelson Strikes Rocks at Entrance of Portsmouth Harbor But is Little Damaged

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., Jan. 12: (CP)—H. M. S. Nelson, "wonder ship of the British Navy" and flagship of Sir William Boyle, commander-in-chief of the home fleet, went on the rocks at the entrance of the harbor this morning and, after holding fast for several hours, was safely refloated early this evening and is believed to have not been seriously damaged. The stranding occurred when the ship was on its way to join the fleet on a cruise to the West Indies. H. M. S. Nelson is reputedly almost unsinkable and has been described as the "oddest and ugliest ship ever built."

Passengers will be carried in cabins within the wings of a giant airplane being built in Germany.

Natives Killing Sharks at Suva Described and Beauty of Ceylon Compared With Poverty of India

Observations made as a result of eleven voyages around the world were the subject matter of an intensely interesting address at the regular luncheon of the Rotary Club yesterday in the Commodore Cafe by R. G. van der Sluys who showed photographs of many of the places visited and the objects he described. W. M. Blackstock presided in the absence of John Dybhavn, the president. Some years ago the speaker spent six months on the Fiji Islands where most of the labor is done by indentured natives from Caledonia and Bombay. Natives of the island do not care to work except just sufficient to enable them to eat. Among the exciting events pictured was that of men fighting with sharks at Suva. The swimmers smeared their hands and feet with
