Basketball is due for an everhauland all because a Vancouver Island town decided something must be done about the hoop game's fall from its former place as one of the major crowd attracting sports of the winter season. Basketball officials of Nanaimo, coal-mining cenlire on Vancouver Island, went into a huddle prior to the season's opning and came out with an inno-1 vation that may revolutionize the ame in the west. The game was too slow. Too much whistle blowing clowed it up and in a regulation 40 nutes actual play. Nauaimo ofticials inserted a rule calling for the playing of all games on a netenclosed floor which / would keep the ball in play at all/times. Whenever the ball struck the net and rebounded, it was put in play by the player who retrieved it. The British Columbia Inter-City League, a more conservative body, followed with their own rule. In future, substitutions in inter-city games would be made on the fly, without stoping the game, and the referee would not trandle the ball on out of bound plays.

Coach / "Chuck" Jones, of the Vancouver Province, Canadian senior man's champions, now brings to the front an idea he believes will make the turnstile click merrily but he is, not so sure, however, if it will win many titles. This year the champions will go "out there and gallop" as their coach directs Shuck wants speed; so does the crowd. Both are likely to get it. In addition he has drilled his team in the triple pivot, a play which Yale University used last year. The Elis found it so successful their attendance doubled and they adopted the intricate move permanently. As an attraction at half-time, the Province players will indulge in a little 'pepper" basketball-similar 'pepper" baseball.
