

RENEWING THE OLD ST. JOHN

Plans Prepared for Modern Adaptation of One of Prince Rupert's Pioneer Hotel Buildings to Cater for New Class of Trade.

One of the opineer hostilities of Prince Rupert, the St. John Hotel is to undergo transformation shortly. Plans have been prepared to turn the hotel into a thoroughly up-to-date building to cater for the best class of business. The proprietor, Mr. J. S. Bonneau, will expend a considerable amount of money on the work, and when complete the St. John Hotel, though one of the first buildings of its kind to go up in Prince Rupert off the reserve, will rank with the newest hotel buildings, not however on such a large scale as those in the central business section.

The building consists of two storeys and basement, and is a substantial one capable of considerable adaptation to the new class of business. A handsome new decorated front is planned for, and the building throughout will be painted freshly, decorated, and plastered. Besides this there will be an entire re-equipment of the hotel fittings, and an installation of modern plumbing, hot and cold water and all modern conveniences. W. S. Barker is architect for the alterations.

Situated as it is on First avenue near Second street the hotel is likely to meet with the ready patronage as the boat wharf and railway depot are within a stone's throw of the building. First avenue is being rapidly graded, and this part of the town, owing to the forthcoming G. T. P. improvements on the reserve will be much enhanced by next summer.

MOUNT ETNA'S THREATS

Peasants Fear a Repetition of Massena Disaster

(Canadian Press Despatch)
Catania, Sept. 13.—The crest of Mount Etna presents a terrifying spectacle. Heavy smoke lies over it, and frequent brilliant flashes of flame are accompanied by a rumbling like heavy artillery fire. Peasants are fleeing, fearing a repetition of the Massena disaster. A stream of lava 2000 feet wide and four feet deep is pouring down the slope.

DUFF PATTULLO SCORES McBRIDE

"Sir Wilfrid, I believe, once said that when history came to be written he hoped that his name would always live in connection with the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Laudable as is that desire, I believe that there is another regard in which Laurier will live longer in the history of his country; I refer to the spirit of tolerance to which I have already adverted.

"Whatever may have been the great gulf dividing the two political parties at Ottawa, however bitter and acrimonious might be discussions, whatever the racial and religious cries formulated and promulgated for purposes of political advantage, over and above all there has always risen the outstanding figure of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, urgent and serene in its plea for a greater national unity and a greater national development.

"Here's to you, Sir Wilfrid Laurier; of blood, French; of loyalty, British; of ideal, Canadian; you're the greatest Canadian of us all. May God prosper you and long preserve you to further the service of your country."

NAVIGATION OF SHIP OF STATE

Cy Peck's Felicitous Comparison of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the Skilful Navigator of the Dangerous Rapids of the Skeena.

C. W. Peck has returned from a speaking tour with Duncan Ross up the Skeena, and a quotation from one of the clever speeches he made during the trip seems worthy of reproduction. He was speaking to the voters of Hazelton, and in the course of the address said:

"I believe a trip up the Skeena river is one of the most thrilling and interesting that may be enjoyed in the whole run of world travel. It never fails to impress me—this death struggle, as it were, with the swift running current.

"I was extremely interested yesterday when our steamer encountered the Devil's Elbow. It seemed to me about the limit of perilous navigation. One false move, should any of the gear break, and the steamer is at once dashed to what may be utter destruction.

"But one sees no excitement or worry upon the faces of the passengers. Everyone seems calm and easy in his mind. Why so? Because they know that up in the wheel house, though they may not see him, stands good Captain Shannon, with his hand on the steering lever like a man of iron.

"Everyone knows that he is the master of the situation; they have confidence in his seamanship; they know that he will bring the ship safely through these terrible waters.

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—Our Canadian ship of state has come to the very Devil's Elbow in her passage up the waters of history. She is at a point where she may be in danger of being swept back by a tide of racial prejudice, narrow sectionalism, fake loyalty agitation, class rule and the influence of privileged interests.

"But though our good ship shudders and strains in this whirlpool of infamous political tactics, we fear no danger. We have every confidence. We trust that our old, grey-headed, French Canadian captain, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose hand is on the steering lever, will land us safely.

"We have learned to know that hand; we know that it is firm and strong. We know that he will

Over a ridiculously high tariff wall and penalized now on one side and now on the other, trade continues between Canadians and Americans. This in itself proves the absurdity of the position of the restriction press in picking out every sale in Canada as if it were an injury.
