Here's the Answer by an Outstanding Chemist

15 drops of HOME GAS starts your engine

1/200TH part of a gallon runs it for 1 minute

HERE is definite proof of the outstanding economy of using Home Gas. This is not the enthusiastic opinion of a Home Gas "fan", but the findings of a prominent Western Canadian analyst and chemist, based upon tests made with eight different makes of cars of various ages and mileages. General Motors Standard Laboratory equipment was used for each test.

In every test Home Gas made the high score. For a quick and economical start, for rapid acceleration, power on the hill, anti-knock quality, purity and more miles per gallon, Home Gas is unsurpassed.

A. At the bottom of the beaker (marked "A" above) you see the actual size of 15 drops of gasoline—the amount of Home Gas needed to start your engine.

B. The filled beaker (above, marked "B") shows in actual size the amount of Home Gas that will run your engine for a whole minute.

Gentlemen:-

We have recently completed a series of tests to ascertain the exact amount of Home Gas it required to:-

1. START the average car.
2. START and RUN the average car for one minute.

The results obtained prove:-

1. The average car will START on 15 DROPS of HOME GASOLINE.
2. It will START and RUN (idle) for One Minute on ONE TWO-HUNDREDTH (1/200th) of a Gallon of HOME GASOLINE.

In the above tests, eight cars ranging from one week to nine years old were used, with mileages from 3 to 98,000.

Yours truly,
